Short of rejection

Material request comments issued

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House said today it would be "constitutionally irresponsible" for President Nixon to agree to provide further material to the House Judiciary Committee until the panel defines its charges against the President.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler repeated Nixon's contention that the committee, now considering impeachment resolutions, already has sufficient White House tapes and documents "to conclude their inquiry and complete it quickly."

Ziegler stopped short of flatly rejecting the panel's request for 42 additional tape recordings. But he declared the fact an impeachment inquiry is under way "does not give Congress the right to back a truck up and haul off the executive files it wants."

Ziegler's comments came shortly after the senior Republican on the committee said the White House has begun to deliver tapes the committee has considered trying to get by subpoena for its impeachment inquiry.

Ziegler disclosed for the first time that the Judiciary Committee's investigation has branched far beyond Watergate and related scandals. He said the White House already is providing "boxes of materials" on such subjects as government antitrust decisions, Environmental Protection Agency decisions, oil import quota actions and decisions by the Cost of Living Council, the comptroller of currency and the Federal Communications Commission.

Ziegler said the material furnished the special Watergate prosecutor and now being given to the House committee included data on the ITT antitrust case, the milk price support controversy, campaign practices and finances and operations of the White House Plumbers.

Ziegler complained that the committee was asking for the 42 additional tapes even before it reviewed the material the White House had agreed to provide.

The breadth of the committee's requests for documents and tapes, Ziegler said, "emphatically illustrates the necessity of authoritatively defining what is an impeachable offense" as well as what the charges are under that definition.

An impeachment inquiry, Ziegler continued, "cannot be a vehicle to override or undermine the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers."

Ziegler added that it would be "constitutionally irresponsible for any chief executive to succumb to such a procedure."

Rep. Edward Hutchinson, R-Mich., without saying where he got the information, told the committee tapes in three of the six subject areas the committee is probing have been sent to Capitol Hill.

Chairman Peter Rodino, D-N.J., said he had no such information. "So far as I know, none of them have been received," Rodino said.

The tapes are in addition to material the White House has given to special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski, which Nixon has agreed to give to the Judiciary Committee.

Asphyxiation said cause of silo deaths

(Democrat-Capital Service)

COLE CAMP — Asphyxiation from carbon monoxide was listed as the cause of death for two men who fell into a 40-foot silo on the Herbert Jagel farm, seven miles northeast of here on Route Y, Monday evening.

According to Benton County Sheriff Robert Breashears, Ralph Minor, 23, Rich Hill, fell into the silo while working with three other employees of the K. W. Harvester Co., Inc., Nevada. The men were installing an air bag in the silo, it was reported.

Harley Green, 20, El Dorado Springs, entered the silo in an attempt to rescue Minor, but he was also overcome by carbon monoxide.

The other two men, Richard Schnedlar and Steve Brown, Nevada, went to summon help, and the bodies of the two men were recovered by Cole Camp firemen about 30 to 40 minutes after the accident.

The gas presumably originated from silage stored in the structure. Silage is chopped fodder stored in such silos for later use as animal feed.

Minor was born Oct. 26, 1950, son of Claude and Esther Van Allen Minor, both of Rich Hill. Green was born April 26, 1954, son of Lawrence and Imogene Bookout Green, Center, N.D.

The bodies were taken to the Fox Funeral Home here.

Seven hours later

Youthful hijacker is captured

TOKYO (AP) — An 18-year-old Japanese hijacked a Japan Air Lines jumbo jet with 425 other persons aboard today but was captured seven hours later by police bringing food on board.

Police said the youth, who carried a black bag but turned out to be unarmed, told them he wanted to do research of the earth.

They said he took over the Boeing 747, with a record number of persons aboard for a hijacking, by presenting a note to a crew member saying "Obey our orders. If not, I cannot guarantee the lives of the passengers."

An officer said the youth's comment about wanting to study the world might be the reason he demanded Alpine equipment including ropes, shovels, knives and face masks, and 15 parachutes.

JAL officials said he also demanded $55 million in $1,000 bills and 200 million yen, about the equivalent of $666,000, in 10,000-yen notes.

Police identified the youth at Katsuhito

It's part of a training program now underway at the Sedalia police department in which 13 Highway Patrolmen and three police officers are learning advanced first aid and emergency care. The 40-hour course includes water emergencies, childbirth, sudden illness and, as shown above, removing the injured from a vehicle. Sedalia was chosen as the training site because of its centralized location for Troop "A" Patrolmen. Another class is scheduled for April 15. (Democrat-Capital Photo)

Missouri Senate passes measure reducing House

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri House would be reduced in size from 163 members to 103 under an amendment approved today by the Senate.

The move by Sen. William B. Waters, D-Liberty, came on a proposed constitutional amendment, being debated for first-round approval, to change the makeup of the House Reapportionment Commission.

Waters' proposal would not take effect until Jan. 1, 1983, after the 1980 census and after the 1982 House elections.

The representation in the House would be three representatives for every Senate member. There are 34 senators.

Waters called the House "unwieldy, entirely too large and too costly."

He said the House might go along with the move because the proposed constitutional amendment, if approved by the people would not take effect for eight years.

Sen. John Schneider, D-Florissant, said the House speaker told him he favored the reduction.

The Senate delayed action on two other proposed constitutional amendments, one to allow the lieutenant governor and governor to be the same political party and remove the lieutenant governor's duties in the Senate, and to give counties home rule, allowing them to have all powers except those covered by the constitution or state statutes.

Monday afternoon, the Senate gave first-round approval to a bill giving 18-year-olds all adult rights except the right to buy and possess alcoholic beverages.

The proposed constitutional amendment received preliminary approval after it was amended to remove all restrictions on House district boundaries crossing county lines.

The Senate attached an anti-liquor amendment by Sen. Earl Blackwell, D-Hillsboro, on a 19-10 vote.

Adult rights now apply to 21-year-olds in the state. Because of a federal law, 18-year-olds can vote.

A similar bill got lost in the closing hours of last year's session.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. A. Clifford Jones, R-Brentwood, was criticized by opponents who said 18-year-olds living with parents might be able to receive welfare. They also said it would remove any person 18 or over from the protection of juvenile courts.

Sen. William Cason, D-Clinton, supported Blackwell's amendment to delete the right to buy or use alcoholic beverages, saying "at one time alcohol was a severe problem in my life ... I'm for 18-year-old rights minus booze."

Sen. Maurice Schecter, D-Creve Coeur, said a college student had told him if college students could buy liquor, many would stay away from drugs.

Phillips is scheduled for trial April 23

(Democrat-Capital Service)

COLUMBIA — A trial date of April 23 has been set for the second-degree murder trial of Kim Eugene Phillips in Boone County Circuit Court here, a court spokesman said Tuesday.

Phillips, 21, a former airman at Whiteman AFB, is accused of murdering Mrs. Karen Jones, 16, on Aug. 13 last year at her apartment at 1218 East Fifth in Sedalia.

The case was moved from Pettis County to Boone County on a change of venue.

A court spokesman said that although the trial is set for only one day, it could be extended, if necessary.

Boone County Circuit Court Judge Frank Conley will preside at the trial. The other Circuit Court judge in Boone County, John M. Cave, disqualified himself from the case on a motion filed by Adam Fischer, Phillips' Sedalia attorney.

Judge Cave previously ruled in January that written and oral statements allegedly obtained from Phillips can be used in court. A hearing on the admissibility of the evidence was held in Judge Cave's court last December.

Phillips is currently undergoing a mental examination at the State Hospital at Fulton to determine whether he is capable of standing trial on the murder charge.

When released, he will be transferred to the custody of Boone County sheriff's officers. A sheriff's department spokesman said Tuesday he did not know when Phillips would be released.

Phillips has been at the hospital now for two months.

Results of an autopsy on Miss Jones showed that she died of strangulation. She also was stabbed several times.

Phillips was arrested Aug. 16 after he voluntarily took a lie detector test in Lee's Summit in connection with the investigation.

Ordinance specifying hours 'unheard of'

George Thompson, Democratic candidate for mayor, has taken the position that any ordinance setting forth the working hours of the mayor, or specifying fulltime effort, would be illegal.

Thompson said Tuesday he talked by telephone with an assistant attorney general who called such a provision "unheard of." Thompson said he asked for a formal opinion from the attorney general, but settled for a verbal one after being told that only state and county officials could get written opinions.

C. B. Burns Jr., chief counsel of the opinion division of the attorney general's office, who spoke with Thompson, told The Democrat-Capital: "I know of no other situation where they specify that you must work certain hours," in regard to mayors of third class cities.

"I have serious doubts ... about going further than the state statutes," Burns added. State law mainly sets forth the duties and powers of mayors of third class cities without going into the amount of time they must be spent on the job.

"I have not looked into it at all, but I would be doubtful," Burns said about such a provision.

Mayor Jerry Jones said Tuesday that City Counselor Bob Fritz takes the position that the City Council "could add to or amplify" in regard to a mayor's duties as long as it did not pass anything in conflict with state law.

Burns agreed to a point. "There is certainly some power ... to make further requirements," he said. "Just where the cut-off point is, I don't know."

Burns said to his knowledge there has never been an attorney general's opinion on such a question, nor similar cases.

Thompson reiterated Tuesday his consent to the City Council drawing up an opinion ballot in whatever form the mayor and other Republicans would prefer. But he said he feels such a ballot would be meaningless.

The City Council is expected to consider another opinion ballot at its meeting March 18, after Jones said he would veto the first version.

Cross-examination

'Fix' request denied by Sears

NEW YORK (AP) — Government witness Harry L. Sears told a jury today that he never asked former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell to fix the Vesco case.

"Do you know what 'fix' means in common parlance?" asked Mitchell's lawyer, Peter Fleming, at the conspiracy trial of Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans.

"Yes, I know what 'fix,' means," said Sears, who said he was the go-between in a secret $200,000 cash contribution by financier Robert L. Vesco to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

"Did you attempt to fix the Vesco case with Mr. Mitchell," asked Fleming, who was cross-examining Sears.

"No, sir," Sears said.

"Did you ever ask Mr. Mitchell to fix the Vesco case?"

"Never at any time."

The two former cabinet officers are accused of attempting to impede a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of Vesco in return for his campaign contribution.

Sears, former majority leader of the New Jersey state senate and head of Nixon's campaigns in that state, said that when he first met Mitchell in 1969, Mitchell said he knew him as "the honest politician in New Jersey."

"That's a rough state for politicians, New Jersey?" Fleming asked. A prosecution objection prevented an answer.

Sears said he had been called "the honest politician." He also said "... I agree with it."

Sears said that when he asked Mitchell's help in getting Vesco out of jail in Switzerland in 1971 that there was no mention of a possible campaign contribution from Vesco.

Vesco had been jailed in Berne on the complaint of a dissident stockholder in the mutual fund operation he controlled. Sears had retired from public life to go on Vesco's payroll as a $60,000 a year lawyer. Sears said he called his friend, Mitchell, and reported that Vesco was in a Swiss jail without bail and asked him what he could do.

"Did Mitchell ever tell you he would make sure Vesco got out of jail," asked Fleming.

"No," he said he would do what he could," Sears said.

Mitchell did try to reach the U.S. ambassador in Switzerland but failed, Sears said. Vesco's lawyers subsequently got bail set at $125,000 and it was posted. Sears said the charge was dismissed in a few months and the magistrate who had refused to set bail originally was censured by the Swiss Supreme Court.

Fleming asked Sears whether he had heard that the SEC had tried to prevent Vesco from making contact with the U.S. embassy and to keep him in jail there.

Sears replied affirmatively.

This was Sears' first full day of cross-examination. He had undergone five days of testimony as a key government witness in the trial.

Ann Landers

Single asks way to meet men

Dear Ann Landers: I'm 39, divorced, and I've tried all the "proper" ways to meet decent men. Here's where I am now:

1. Stuck in a bowling league with some fun-loving sports — average age, 75.

2. Out $50 — joined a church singles group with a great bunch of folks. All very neurotic.

3. Stuck in a political club as an officer with a bunch of dedicated people. All married.

As it now stands, I have Wednesday evenings free and I'd like to invest that evening in something a little more promising than my other ties. Would you please ask your readers two questions:

1. Other women who found themselves divorced and widowed: Where and how did you meet your second husband?

2. Unmarried, straight, non-alcoholic, self-supporting males over 30: Where do you go in hopes of meeting a woman worth marrying?

I don't get much sympathy from the old folks in the bowling league, or the neurotic singles, or the political marrieds. They all say the same thing: "You shouldn't have any trouble. You have SO much to offer." Now my only problem is to find someone to offer it to. How about some help from your corner? — Wednesday Free

Dear Free: O.K., here's your letter. How about it, second-time-arounders? Where did you meet your second husband? And you unattached, desirable guys — where do you go in search of a girl you could bring home to mother? Please tell me so I can tell HER!

Dear Ann Landers: I was irritated by that letter from the woman who implied that when the wife is in the driver's seat and her husband is beside her, it means she is the dominant personality in the family and runs things — figuratively as well as literally.

In our family, it's quite a different story. My husband is a strong man and the head of the household, except when he has had too much to drink. It doesn't happen very often but the last time it did, he insisted on driving home from a party and nearly killed us both.

Now we have an understanding. Whenever he has had even one drink, I do the driving. I told him, "I'll take a taxi before I ride with a drunk." He got the message. — Get Bombed And You're A Passenger

Dear G.B.: Since booze is a factor in approximately 50 per cent of car accidents, your position makes a great deal of sense. I hope other wives will follow your lead. Here's another good letter:

Dear Ann Landers: I do the driving in our family. Although my husband looks like the picture of health, he has a medical problem which would make driving hazardous. The details are nobody's business and I feel no obligation to explain.

Occasionally some clod will make a crack about my being in the driver's seat. I retaliate with an icy stare. I have seriously considered having a sign made which reads "MYOB" — or have you copyrighted the phrase? — Corpus Christi

Dear Chris: Be my guest.

What kind of wedding goes with today's new life styles? Does anything go? Ann Landers's completely new "The Bride's Guide" tells what's right for today's weddings. For a copy, send a dollar bill, plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope (20 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 3346, Chicago, Ill. 60654.

VanderVeen won Ford's seat without paid TV

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Richard VanderVeen is a strange politician. He doesn't believe the theory that nowadays paid TV ads are a must in a major congressional race — his own, for example.

"I just don't think it's very effective," says the Michigan Democrat, who used radio ads but no TV commercials in his successful race last month for Vice President Gerald R. Ford's old House seat.

"I just don't like paid TV," added VanderVeen, the first Democrat since 1910 to be elected to Ford's solidly Republican 5th District. "I think it's contrived too often."

A soft-voiced lawyer whose three previous bids for elective office all ended in defeat, his campaign had heavy newspaper advertising aimed at Republicans soured by Watergate and the economy.

But acknowledging his dislike of paid TV ads, what other reason had he for restricting his paid electronic ads to radio?

"It's because we felt we would get good coverage on television news," the 51-year-old congressman said. "And that's the way it worked out. Actually, we had a lot of time on TV, but that's because television covered the campaign well."

"They had special interviews, shows, panel discussions, and we felt that gave us all the television exposure that was needed."

According to a VanderVeen aide, a total of $6,500 was spent on radio advertising in a campaign that cost $75,000 over-all.

The big aural push came in the campaign's last three weeks, when the candidate's campaign committee plunged heavily on one-minute ads on six of the district's radio stations, the aide said.

VanderVeen recorded one that never was aired. The committee decided instead to rely on five other radio spots in which the candidate said not word one, according to the aide.

Five area residents did all the talking. They were an auto worker, a Republican stockbroker, a 67-year-old widow, a furniture company president and a minister.

According to the aide, the worker griped about President Nixon and taxes; the stockbroker said he was voting Democrat "because of the way the country was going," and the furniture executive, who contributed $950 to VanderVeen's campaign, praised his qualifications.

The widow complained about the GOP candidate, State Sen. Robert VanderLaan, and the minister cited moral reasons why he felt Nixon should resign, the aide said.

He said they all ended with words generally to the effect of "that's why I'm voting for" VanderVeen, who campaigned on the premise Nixon should resign and Ford, the district's favorite for 25 years, should take Nixon's place in the White House.

"I kept receiving compliments during the campaign about the commercials," the new congressman said. "They were unique in that they were read by real people in the community ... and I think they had a real impact of actually influencing people."

Will he use the same type of campaign in the fall?

"I don't know," he mused. "We'll have to wait until things develop. I would think we'd have this sort of thing, yes, but we'll have to wait and see."

Impact here of plumbing decision is not known

The impact of a Missouri Supreme Court ruling Monday on attempts to clarify the constitutionality of the Sedalia plumbing code was not immediately known by local attorneys involved in the efforts.

In the Supreme Court case, a Cape Girardeau couple contended their city's plumbing code placed property owners at the mercy of licensed plumbers in the city. They had sought to replace sewer lines under a two-story office building now being constructed, but were prevented from doing so by the city because they were not certified plumbers.

The high court Monday declared the plumbing industry was reasonably regulated and that there is no discrimination against property owners because all unlicensed persons are prohibited from performing plumbing work without a permit.

In a somewhat similar situation, William Colvin, 1800 South Kentucky, is contesting the city's action in denying him a permit to perform plumbing work on his property at 812 East Sixth. Colvin is not a licensed plumber.

Colvin's case, which was heard in Municipal Court, prompted the City Council in February to file a petition with the Circuit Court seeking a declaratory judgment on the constitutionality of the city plumbing code. Later in the month, Colvin's attorney, Craig Cassing, filed a second declaratory judgment petition and included some information which, he said, was not presented in the council's petition.

Cassing Monday afternoon indicated he would confer with the lawyer handling the Cape Girardeau case and other authorities before deciding on what, if any, future action he would take.

"There may possibly be some factors in our case that are different from the Cape Girardeau one," Cassing said.

"I don't know for sure yet, but I plan to investigate the situation completely. I can assure you that."

City Counselor Bob Fritz Monday declined to comment on the matter until he can thoroughly study the complete text of the court's decision.

Have your blood pressure checked. Your life may depend on it.

There's a one-in-seven chance you have high blood pressure. And a 50-50 chance you don't know it. 23 million Americans have it. And 60 thousand of them die each year as a direct result of it.

High blood pressure, or hypertension, is a hidden disease that can strike anyone, regardless of age, without warning. It has no real symptoms to speak of. And the ones it does have — headaches, dizziness, tiredness — are very easy to ignore. Or very easy to diagnose as symptoms of something else. But left unchecked, high blood pressure can lead to heart failure, stroke, even kidney failure. All of which could leave you crippled or paralyzed. Or dead.

But the news isn't all bad.

High blood pressure is extremely simple and painless to detect. It's only a matter of having your blood pressure measured, and you know how easy that is. What's more, high blood pressure is relatively simple to control in the majority of cases, with special medication, diet and exercise.

The point is, it's much easier to live with high blood pressure than to die from it.

All you have to do is have your blood pressure checked regularly. Every time you visit your doctor, regardless of the reason.

Don't wait. It could be a matter of life or death.

Closed caucus session protest

By JONATHAN HAUFEE ..
Associated Press Writer
JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Members of the Capitol press corps, covering the Missouri House Monday, protested a closed Democratic caucus by refusing to leave the press gallery until asked to do so by the House speaker.

Several newsmen said the closed caucus violated the state open meetings law. Rep. Gladys Marriot, D-Kansas City, the caucus chairwoman, and House ushers asked newsmen to leave, without success.

Then House Speaker Richard Rabbitt, D-St. Louis, speaking from the House floor, asked the newsmen to leave.

They agreed to go and met Rabbitt on a stairway. They told Rabbitt they objected to closed meetings about what they called "policy discussions" of campaign spending and appropriations bills.

In the past, legislators have discussed money bills in closed caucuses.

House Democratic leaders issued remarks prepared for the caucus, stating their position on campaign reform.

When Rabbitt met newsmen he told them he thought party caucuses were exempt from the open meetings law.

He said it was an informal meeting at which no public policy was discussed.

He said he thought the question was up to the courts and said, "I'd be happy to ask for a declaratory judgment" on the matter.

"If we let the press in, we'd have to let the Republicans in" and there would be no reason to have a caucus, Rabbitt said. Newsmen said they agreed party strategy sessions are not covered by the open meetings law, but objected to closed meetings on public issues.

The open meetings law says all meetings shall be open to the public where "public business" is discussed. It exempts political party meetings except where political candidates are chosen.

"Every time two politicians talk do we have to notify the other party and the press?" Rabbitt asked.

He noted caucus decisions "have no binding effect" on party members.

Rabbitt said the matter was a difference of opinion and said, "I appreciate you gentlemen cooperating."

Rabbitt said he would be willing to work with media attorneys and submit a stipulation of the facts to a court.

It takes 82 votes for a majority in the House. There are 98 Democrats and 65 Republicans in the House.

In the prepared remarks handed out just before the closed caucus, Democratic leaders said there still is enough time to pass workable campaign reform in this session.

Majority Leader Kenneth Rothman, D-Clayton, said, "the most important provision in the campaign spending bill is to have complete disclosure of who gives the funds to a candidate and where ... the funds are spent."

Rothman said limits on what a candidate may spend are essential "so that someone with a great deal of personal wealth cannot buy an office."

Reform of the campaign spending law has been listed as a top priority of the governor and the leadership of both houses.

From hot to cold

President Nixon returned to snowy Washington Monday after leaving sunny Florida. Bryce Harlow, Nixon's top congressional liaison, told reporters on the Presidential flight that Rep. Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., ascribed "guilt by innuendo" to the President in a statement indicating there could be fraud in his tax returns. (UPI)

White House steps up counterattack

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House has stepped up its counterattack on those who suggest that President Nixon should or will resign.

Presidential counselor Bryce Harlow, talking with reporters on Nixon's jetliner en route back from Florida Monday night, accused Rep. Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., of engaging in McCarthy-like tactics.

Harlow, who had dinner with Nixon Monday evening at the President's bayside Florida home, said Mills should "put up or shut up."

Mills said in Little Rock last week that he expects Nixon to resign, indicating he based his forecast on a report being prepared by the House-Senate Internal Revenue Taxation Committee. Mills is vice chairman of the committee, which, at Nixon's request, is studying his federal tax returns for the past four years.

Harlow said if Mills has facts on which to base his statements he should make them known. Referring to the era of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, Harlow said that 20 years ago the press became upset about a campaign of guilt by innuendo, adding that he wondered why the press was not upset by Mills' assertions.

The presidential counselor said he was among the advisers who have urged Nixon to undertake the personal appearances across the country which have been scheduled during the next 10 days. People like to see the President in person and get their impressions first hand instead of through the "Washington filter," Harlow said in a reference to the news media.

Nixon is scheduled to go to Chicago Thursday, probably meeting with Democratic Mayor Richard J. Daley before holding a question-and-answer session Friday with the Economic Club.

Then, Saturday, Nixon is to fly to Nashville, Tenn., where he will welcome his wife, Pat, back from a six-day Latin America tour and join her in attending the "Grand Old Opry."

The following Tuesday — March 19 — Nixon is scheduled to conduct a nationally televised and broadcast question-and-answer session with members of the National Association of Broadcasters, at their convention in Houston, Tex.

Sources report the White House also is considering trips to New England, Denver, Colo., and Seattle, Wash., but these journeys apparently will hinge on the success of the already scheduled appearances.

Unemployment drop credited to weather

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Claims for unemployment insurance benefits in February dropped by more than 73,000 to 205,666 for the month, a Missouri Division of Employment Security official said today.

February unemployment payments were $10,919,364. William S. Harris, division director, said claims dropped because of improved weather, renewed construction activity and resumption of work in some areas that had been affected by layoffs.

About 10 per cent of the claims were attributed to the energy crisis.

The number of weeks compensated for insured workers, including those filed by veterans and former federal civilian employees, also decreased from January and totaled 200,868, he said.

Watergate requests revealed

By DICK BARNES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Judiciary Committee unsuccessfully sought tapes of 42 presidential conversations rather than six, according to White House analysis of the hitherto secret request.

And, at the same time, the committee's chief impeachment lawyer, John Doar, asked for access to all the files of four Watergate figures who once were top aides to President Nixon.

The Judiciary Committee released the text of the White House refusal of both requests last Thursday, but Doar wouldn't specify what he had asked for.

The White House has agreed to furnish the committee anything previously given to the special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski. However, the prosecutor has not been given any of the 42 conversations, a White House official said.

Members of the committee, a number of whom have not seen Doar's letter, have spoken as if six conversations were requested. But details of Doar's letter, made available by a White House official, show he sought evidence on Nixon conversations in six categories, not just six conversations.

The White House official says the six categories add up to 42 conversations Nixon held variously with H.R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman, Charles W. Colson, John W. Dean III, Richard G. Kleindienst and Henry R. Petersen during February, March and April 1973.

The first four were all top White House aides. Kleindienst was attorney general and Petersen is an assistant attorney general.

Additionally, Doar referred to files of the four former White House aides and discussed whether "we could work out a way whereby members of the inquiry staff may examine these files for the purpose of selecting materials which, in our opinion, are necessary for the investigation."

The official who made the letter available asked that his name not be used, but said the files request was "an unreasonable demand for a fishing expedition."

He contended that Doar tried to hide the request by not making the letter available at the same time the committee released the White House response from James D. St. Clair, Nixon's impeachment defense lawyer.

Doar, at an open committee hearing Thursday, read only a portion of his letter and said he could not detail his request because defendants in Watergate criminal cases were involved.

He and committee chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., have consistently maintained the committee is not interested in a fishing expedition.

IRS said worried by reaction

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Although reluctant to acknowledge it publicly, officials of the Internal Revenue Service are concerned about taxpayer reaction to the controversy over President Nixon's income taxes.

Political observers and outside tax experts warn of a possible taxpayer reaction that could lead to a reduction in anticipated government revenues in 1974.

One former IRS Commissioner, Johnnie M. Walters, has said that a loss of $1 billion would not be unrealistic. Rep. Charles Vanik, an Ohio Democrat on the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, said revenues might be cut by as much as 10 per cent, or about $25 billion.

Vanik said he found in extensive contacts with constituents that "the voluntary income tax system ... is now being threatened to the peril point by the moral indifference of the President to his own tax obligations and his position as a national leader."

And a New York tax advisory firm told its clients in a recent letter that "IRS officials are afraid that average taxpayers will follow the recent examples of corner-cutting politicians and do some wholesale cheating of their own."

The controversy over Nixon's taxes grew out of disclosure that he paid about $6,000 in income taxes on a total income of nearly $800,000 from 1970 through 1972, benefiting particularly from large deductions for donating vice presidential papers to the National Archives.

Senior Internal Revenue Service officials publicly discount the idea of significant taxpayer resistance resulting from the Nixon case, contending that the worst that can happen is that many taxpayers are likely to look harder for legal but perhaps questionable deductions.

Even that could cause a significant cutback in anticipated revenues, IRS observers say, although nobody is prepared at this early stage to predict how much.

Voicing an opinion that apparently is shared by many high IRS officials, John J. Olszewski, chief of the intelligence division that investigates tax frauds, said the American taxpayers "are going to be either honest or dishonest, depending on their own moral standards, but not because somebody else supposedly set an example for them."

This means an upsurge of interest in finding legal deductions, which taxpayers in the past might have been willing to ignore, but none in trying to defraud the government or avoid taxes.

Capital punishment opponents fail in attempt to kill measures

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A Kansas City newsman who spent more than 12 years in the state penitentiary on a murder charge he pleaded guilty to, told the Senate Criminal Justice Committee Monday night that capital punishment is no deterrent to murder.

Joe Maloney, convicted of murder after an armed robbery when he was 19, told the panel, "very few felons committing crimes premeditate murder."

He said when he robbed a grocery in 1959 he was carrying a gun but did not plan to use it until the grocer pulled a gun on him. After the murder, however, Maloney said he planned a kill a policeman because, "I knew I faced death."

He said he was stopped from killing an officer by a friend. The Kansas City Star reporter said most felons shun murder, unless they know they already face the death penalty.

Maloney was one of a roomful of opponents of capital punishment who testified for four hours before the committee.

Committee action on three death penalty bills was delayed until next week after an attempt to kill the bills by opponents failed.

Sen. Larry Marshall, R-Columbia, called for a vote on the bills, knowing he had enough votes to kill them. All the committee was not present, and several senators considered a walkout after Marshall's move.

However, a motion to delay action later succeeded.

In testimony, Maloney said sections of all the bills making murder for hire carry the death penalty was unrealistic because, "in the U.S. in this century you won't find more than three or four contract killers who were convicted." He said hired killers never expect to get caught so sentence makes no difference to them.

Maloney said death penalties will not deter most felons because they never plan to murder, and thus never consider a murder sentence.

"I wasn't going in there to kill someone. I was going there to rob," he said, adding that most felons are in similar positions. Maloney was sentenced to four life terms.

Sen. Maurice Schechter, D-Creve Coeur, asked, "do you mean nothing can deter murder?" "Generally so," replied Maloney. "I'm afraid you're right," Schechter said.

"You can't cure the problem by becoming more repressive and killing more people," Maloney said.

However, the bills' sponsors said most Missourians want a death penalty law.

Sen. Ike Skelton, D-Lexington said, "punishment of any kind is a deterrent. If that's not true why not give one day in jail for every crime?"

Skelton said the death penalty might deter future kidnap murders, such as the Kitterman murders near Grandin, Mo., about a year ago.

Rep. Bob Griffin, D-Cameron, said House surveys show 83 per cent of all Missourians favor the death penalty. Twenty-two states now have some type of capital punishment.

Paving material damages jetliner

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — An American Airlines DC10 jetliner was grounded here after paving material was sucked into its starboard engine, officials say.

Vibrations from the engine damaged the right wing in the mishap Monday, and an American Airlines spokesman said damage might be as high as $1 million.

The plane had just landed on a flight from Phoenix, Ariz., officials said.

Pat Nixon arrives in Venezuela

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Pat Nixon sipped champagne with Venezuela's outgoing president, got caught in bumper-to-bumper traffic and joked about taking a few million gallons of Venezuelan oil home with her.

President Nixon "wished he could be here, but he sent the closest thing to his heart — me," the First Lady of the United States told President Rafael Caldera Monday night as she presented her credentials.

Mrs. Nixon is heading the U.S. delegation for the three-day festivities accompanying the transfer of Venezuela's presidential sash from Caldera to Carlos Andres Perez.

Mrs. Nixon delivered her credentials and a letter to Caldera Monday evening at a reception in the gilt and marble splendor of Miraflores Palace. She was the only woman heading one of the 70 delegations, and her cerise georgette evening gown by Mollis Parnis stood out strikingly among the dark business suits of the male delegates. After shaking hands with Caldera, she held a reception of her own in the colonnaded palace courtyard. Other delegates lined up to talk to her. Then Caldera joined her and drank a glass of champagne with her.

Mrs. Nixon's arrival was quiet, with only Caldera's wife and a few officials to meet her. Mrs. Nixon tried to play down recollections of the 1958 vice-presidential visit to Caracas when a crowd of demonstrators beat on the Nixons' car and spat on it.

Deputy chases his own auto

KEY LARGO, Fla. (AP) — The closer he got to a speeding car, the more familiar it looked to Monroe County Sheriff's Deputy Al Lankin.

Once he got close enough to read the license tag, he said he knew for sure.

"Hey, I'm in pursuit of my own car!" Lankin told the police radio operator.

Lankin said he chased the auto at speeds up to 85 miles an hour, before finally pulling it over.

Lankin said he asked the driver: "This your car?"

"Nope, borrowed it from a friend," Lankin quoted the driver as saying.

"That's funny," said Lankin. "I'd have sworn this car was Al Lankin's car."

"That's right," Lankin said the driver replied. "Good old buddy Al lent us his car."

"Look," Lankin suggested as he leaned toward the driver and displayed his breast pocket name-plate.

Lankin said the driver's only remark after reading the name tag was a short profanity.

Don Yearwood, 44, and his companions, Jack Humrich, 40, and Leon Owen, 41, were booked for possession of a stolen car, police said. Yearwood was also charged with driving while intoxicated and not having a driver's license.

Nixon and Kissinger meeting with Hussein

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met today with Jordan's King Hussein, who brought to Washington a military shopping list headed by a request for Hawk surface-to-air missiles.

As the meeting began in the President's Oval Office, a White House spokesman said the Middle East situation would be discussed.

But the king also was expected to lodge with Nixon a plea for an increase in military aid, now averaging about $40 million a year, to modernize Jordan's armed forces.

Hussein will resume discussions held with Kissinger in Amman earlier this month on Jordan's demands for a sizable Israeli withdrawal in the Jordan Valley. But all sides believe that a disengagement with Syria must come first.

Jordan began its weapons hunt last December. It has already been rewarded for its moderate course in the Middle East with TOW antitank missiles, the American equivalent to the Soviet Sagers that were used effectively by Egyptian and Syrian troops against Israeli tanks in the October War.

But Hussein's list is long. It includes squadrons of jets, tanks, armored personnel carriers, artillery and radar equipment, and possibly more TOWs.

U.S. officials said he had been asked to winnow it once and is likely to be asked again. Before he goes home the king is expected to arrange for additional bargaining involving his subordinates.

On Thursday, Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban will call on Kissinger to begin "preliminary exchanges" on a Golan Heights disengagement with Syria.

Officials said plans were proceeding despite postponement of the Arab oil ministers' meeting in Cairo on Sunday. They said an Israeli delegation would come here within approximately two weeks to be followed by a separate Syrian mission.

Kissinger will work first with the Israelis and then with the Syrians to try to narrow what a senior official called a very wide gap in their proposals for an Israeli withdrawal.

Meanwhile, U.S. officials appeared unruffled by the delay in consideration of lifting the oil embargo against the United States.

Fresh admissions expected in dairy antitrust case

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Fresh admissions are expected in what courthouse officials are calling "Watergate Midwest," the tangled antitrust case against the nation's largest dairy cooperative.

Lawyers for the Texas-based Associated Milk Producers Inc., subject of multiple lawsuits and a Watergate grand jury investigation, are scheduled to submit a lengthy document admitting facts which have developed in pretrial testimony of roughly 100 witnesses and in approximately 2 million documents identified as potential evidence.

U.S. District Court Judge John W. Oliver set a hearing today to receive the anticipated documents. Lawyers for all sides in the case worked into the night Monday to complete the court filing.

Also scheduled tentatively for today was open-court testimony by Dwight Morris, a former official of the milk producers' group, who is expected to give details of an alleged attempt by the co-op's management to get administration officials to kill the government's antitrust suit after it was filed in February 1972.

Courthouse sources said Morris appeared before the Watergate grand jury in Washington on Monday. He also has been interviewed by investigators for the Senate Watergate Committee.

Also Monday, it was disclosed that lawyers for the milk producers are bucking protests from the Watergate special prosecution force by pressing their request for a judge's review of sensitive grand jury evidence and secret White House material.

The milk producers are seeking proof for their claim that the administration brought the antitrust suit against them as a means of extorting further campaign contributions.

The allegation has been denied under oath by former antitrust chief Richard W. McLaren, and the dairymen themselves said in a letter released by the court on Monday, "We concede that to date we have been unable fully to develop such facts" to support their claim.

They said that nevertheless other documents may surface, or future testimony from former White House aide Charles W. Colson, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell or one-time presidential lawyer Herbert W. Kalmbach might "shed additional light on this matter."

Their letter, dated March 9, was in response to a letter dated four days earlier from assistant special prosecutor Jon A. Sale, who is in charge of the Watergate dairy probe. Both letters were sent to Judge Oliver, who is considering the dairymen's claim.

Sale said a Watergate grand jury in Washington is focusing on "possible attempts by AMPI to obtain favorable governmental action" in return for political contributions.

The co-op gave at least $302,000 to President Nixon's various political funds and donated large sums to both Democrats and Republicans in various congressional races in 1970 and 1972. It currently holds the richest political trust in the nation, with more than $1 million on hand, according to government filings.

Phelps object of heated Senate words

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The dispute between Lt. Gov. William C. Phelps and the Democratic leadership of the Senate flared again today when Democrats threw heated words at Phelps for ignoring Sen. Maurice Schechter, D-Creve Coeur.

Both parties walked out and held caucuses after Sen. William J. Cason, D-Clinton, president pro tem, was recognized to move that the Senate recess.

During the shouting, Sen. Earl Blackwell, D-Hillsboro, tried to call for adjournment, but Phelps ignored Blackwell.

Phelps had recognized four senators, including two Republicans, to speak while Schechter stood, asking for recognition. Schechter wanted to bring up a bill on the informal calendar.

The Senate was on its formal calendar and Phelps said later, "I wanted to move on the formal calendar, because I thought the Senate was moving too slowly."

"We're not going to let you run over these senators," Cason said when he got recognition.

Action came to a standstill in the closing hours last session when Cason ordered the ushers to remove Phelps from the chamber because he would not surrender the chair.

Democratic leaders feared a filibuster on the death penalty bill, which failed because the Senate took a four-hour recess while waiting for a decision by the state Supreme Court, which said it did not have enough time to rule.

Phelps, a Republican, won a state Supreme Court suit last fall on his constitutional right to be the presiding officer. But the court has agreed to rehear the case to spell out the lieutenant governor's duties.

EPA approval for sewage plant here

Approval has been received from the federal Environmental Protection Agency for the city's southwest sewage lagoon facility, City Engineer Robert Cunningham said Tuesday.

The EPA sanction, which was not required until last year, insures that the operation complies in all respects with current federal standards.

Prior to last year, Cunningham explained, it was only necessary to secure the approval of the state Clean Water Commission. The federal requirements, he noted, are stricter in certain areas than corresponding state regulations.

Cunningham said EPA approval applications for the city's three other sewage treatment centers have also been submitted. Federal officials have not indicated to him when they will act on these applications, Cunningham said.

Firemen officially accept proposals

Members of Firefighter's Local 823 Monday accepted the results of an agreement arrived at last week by the City Council and union representatives, Local president Robert Vogler reported Monday night.

The firemen voted on the proposals Monday morning, but Vogler would not reveal the outcome until he had contacted Mayor Jerry Jones and Councilman Carl Franklin, chairman of the council fire and water committee.

The agreement included a $50 per month salary increase, a work-week reduction to 50 hours a week, a $5,000 increase in life insurance benefits, time and one-half overtime pay, time and title pay increased to a rank temporarily assumed and longevity pay.

Damage suit filed against Mo. Pacific

The plaintiffs in a $225,000 damage suit against the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. Monday filed a request for a change of venue from Pettis County Circuit Court.

Kenneth M. and Debra Ann Hesse filed suit against Missouri Pacific April 3, 1973, alleging that Hesse was injured when his car was struck while crossing the Missouri Pacific tracks on Park Street Dec. 5, 1972, and that the accident was caused by negligence of the railroad in that the train was traveling at an excessive speed and failed to sound a warning while approaching the crossing.

In their petition for a change of venue, the Hesses allege that a fair trial cannot be obtained in Pettis County because of the "influence" of the railroad.

Ring on table brings a plea

By POLLY CRAMER

DEAR POLLY — My Pet Peeve is with the manufacturers who use thread that fades on the garments they make. I recently bought a pair of white pants, wore them once, washed them in cold water with soap and yellow lines faded from the seams on to the pants. Perhaps someone would know how to remove this. — LINDA

DEAR POLLY — I have started to go to college again and every minute counts. My dryer has saved me so much ironing but I was never satisfied with the side and inside seams on my little boy's trousers. They have a puckered look even with the pulling and smoothing I did. I always wanted to touch them up with the iron. Recently I took his trousers out of the dryer at the almost dry stage and with PRESSURE ran each leg down the edge of the dryer, sometimes twice on each leg with emphasis on the seams. This works like a charm and no more need of touching up. Works on knits also. — JUDY T.

DEAR POLLY and Helen — Venetian blind slats can be painted but I would suggest taking the blinds apart for best results. This is not too difficult. Underneath the bottom rail are clips that cover the knots of the cord that run down through the slats. Remove the clips and knot and pull the cord out of the slats but leave it in the head or you may get in trouble. Slide each slat out and hang them on a wire to get to them easily. Use a good enamel for wood slats and metal paint for metal slats. When they are completely dry slide back into the slats being careful to get the cord first to one side of the ladders and then to the other. — RUBY, a specialist's sister.

DEAR HELEN — If you decide to paint your blinds while they are hanging exercise the utmost care to be sure every angle is painted. This will mean tilting slats this way and that. Unless you are very professional you may have to buy new tapes when finished. — POLLY.

Polly's problem

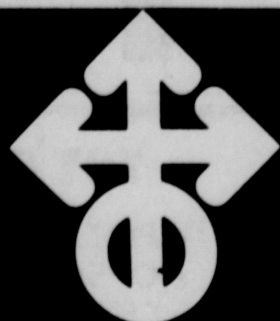

DEAR POLLY — The top to my expensive coffee table was damaged by a chrysanthemum plant sitting on a saucer. The surface is cloudy and there are rings evidently caused by the saucer running over when the plant was watered. I know there has been a remedy for this in the column but it was a long time ago. I do not remember what it was. Please, someone tell me what to do. — MRS. E. W.

Tiny vampire bat is big problem for Mexican health authorities

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican animal health authorities, now in full charge of the national vampire bat control program, are carrying on a campaign in five states to eliminate the flying pest as a threat to the livestock industry.

Dr. Pedro Solana Martagon, director general of the National Institute of Livestock Research (INIP) here, estimated that the tiny vampires, three inches in length and weighing less than two ounces, cause the death of 100,000 head of cattle a year in Mexico as carriers of bovine paralytic rabies.

"In addition," he declared,

"they cause other deaths from loss of blood, malnutrition and myiasis, and animals which do not die often produce less meat and milk and are subject to infection by other diseases. They also are suspected of carrying Venezuelan equine encephalomyelitis, which killed thousands of horses in Mexico and Central America in 1970-71 and spread across the border into southwestern United States."

Until late last year the anti-vampire bat campaign in Mexico was a cooperative program carried on by INIP, the Agency for International Development and the Department of the Interior of the United States.

Basic research was conducted at Interior's Fish and Wildlife Research Center at Denver, Colo., and field tests were carried on by Mexican and AID scientists in bat-infested areas of Mexico.

Approximately $800,000 has been spent since 1968 on an intensive study of the bats' colonizing habits, flight patterns, feeding behavior, reproductive period and anatomical and physiological characteristics.

The vampires range from central Mexico into northern Argentina and Chile and, according to estimates of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, cause the deaths of more than one million head of cattle a year throughout Latin America. Methods used in the past to destroy them have been complete failures, Dr. Solana said.

In addition, he added, attempts to reduce the vampire population caused severe harm to such beneficial species as fruit- and insect-eating bats which roost in the same areas.

U.S. and Mexican scientists, after discarding such crude and ineffective control measures as dynamiting of roosts, screening of caves, use of flame-throwers and smoke, shooting, traps and nets, lights, poison sprays, and strychnine and arsenic salts smeared on livestock, hit on the use of a blood anticoagulant, diphenadione, which is employed in the treatment of human heart patients.

The control methods are ingeniously dovetailed with the peculiar and specialized physiological and behavioral characteristics of the vampire bats, which roost in tight clusters in caves and trees and like to prey themselves and each other.

One procedure is to inject a solution of the drug into the stomachs of cows; bats drinking their blood will die of internal hemorrhaging within a few hours, Dr. Solana explained. The other method is to trap some of the vampires, smear their backs with a diphenadione salve and release them. Returning to their roosts, they lick themselves and contaminate their companions, he said, and within two weeks they will all die.

Dr. Solana said that anti-vampire campaigns are now being carried on by government and private veterinarians in the states of Oaxaca, Veracruz, Yucatan, Sinaloa and Colima under the direction of Dr. Luis Manriquez Mandujano, while continuing research is being carried on and the diphenadione drug is being produced at the INIP laboratories at Palo Alto, just west of Mexico City, under the direction of Dr. Raul Flores Crespo.

Alaska considering pipeline job film

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — When a state is considering spending $150,000 to produce a film, it usually is with the hope of drawing more people to the state. Alaska seems about ready to do the opposite.

The Alaska House has approved a bill to produce a documentary to discourage job seekers from coming to Alaska with hopes of getting jobs on the trans-Alaska pipeline project.

The chief sponsor of the bill, Anchorage Democrat Russ Meekins, says he thinks people outside Alaska have been misled into believing that lucrative jobs will be available on the pipeline project set to begin this spring.

Citizens of Singapore can't get housemaids

New Blue Cross, Blue Shield head

By PETER O'LOUGHLIN
Associated Press Writer
SINGAPORE (AP) — Oil shortages? Inflation? Making do with ground beef instead of filet?
If you think you've got problems, spare a thought for the citizens of Singapore — they can't get housemaids.
The domestic crisis is so grave a local newspaper devoted a two-part series to the problem and headlined it: "Where have all the maids gone?"
To the factories that have sprung up as a result of Singapore's rapid industrialization seems to be the answer.

"The burgeoning industries have lured away thousands of women to do jobs which they find more rewarding and dignified," said the Nation, assessing the servant shortage. "Being a servant has become a social stigma."
The maid shortage has forced Chinese and European housewives in this hot and humid city, 77 miles from the equator, to bear the unbearable — washing, ironing, cooking and minding the children.
Some households which used to boast a cook, wash amah, baby amah, driver and two gardeners are down to one servant or worse, no servants at all.

There are still some hopefuls who advertise for help, like this one in the Straits Times: "Wanted a couple, an amah or two amahs and a male domestic, must be fond of dogs, large family house." Those who know say ads like that are hopeless.
The more realistic advertise like this: "Cook amah live in small family. No washing (laundry). Attractive quarters."

The more appealing the employer can make the job sound, the better the chance of getting a maid.
British and Chinese bemoan the arrival of large numbers of American oil men and their families in Singapore. They say they've ruined the market.
"Americans pay $250 a month (US$100), give them a television set, nights off, provide a washing machine and pay them $10 (US$4) to mind the kids at night. The next thing they'll be supplying air conditioned quarters," said a maidless Australian naval officer.

Housewives who have advertised report that applicants reverse the interviewer's role.
"My dear, SHE interviewed ME!" said a distressed American woman who has been in Asia for 10 years. "She wanted to know how many children, how many rooms, did we have a washing machine, were there any pets? She inspected the house as if she was buying it."
Gone for good are the days of the loyal and faithful servants who mixed the master's pink gin, wiped the baby's nose, prepared dinner for 14 on two hours' notice.

The days of the stern mah chias, who ruled generations of households in Hong Kong and Singapore, are also numbered. These formidable ladies, the so-called "black and white" amahs, wore short white coats with Chinese collars, long black baggy trousers and wore their hair drawn severely back in a bun.
Abrupt, even downright rude, they worked with the efficiency of a computer and disciplined the kids like a boot camp sergeant.
Many wives admit they are terrified of their servants, particularly these old mah chias, whose English could have been learned from an old Charlie Chan movie.

Subway started
DUESSELDORF, Germany (AP) — This wealthy and elegant capital of the industrious North Rhine's Westphalia State is the latest West German city to start construction of a subway system.
The first stretch of 14.5 kilometers, to reach from Duesseeldorf's central railroad station to nearby Duisburg.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Frank R. Adae, executive vice president of the Rhode Island Blue Cross and Blue Shield, has been named president of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield plans in Kansas City, Mo.
Adae had served as the second ranking officer for the Rhode Island plans for the last 10 years.
An announcement Monday said the Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans in Kansas City had separate presidents and staff, prior to Adae's appointment. They now will be combined under his direction.

Shishkabob?

A fruit and vegetable shishkabob? It may appear that way, but actually Michael Ciemiega, of Reading, Pa., is playing a joke on his friend, an employe of a produce wholesaler who teasingly threw an overripe tomato at him. In retaliation, Mike is mounting overripe vegetables and fruits on his friend's car antenna. (UPI)

Shortage of food containers

By JOSH FITZHUGH
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — There have been plenty of problems with food in the last year or so, but now there are reports of a new one for the people who produce it and sell it.

Raw material shortages, increased demand and energy cutbacks have tightened the container market, whether the containers are made from glass, paper, metal or plastic, industry officials say.

For various reasons, all the usual packaging materials are in shorter supply to container makers these days. And while no one seems to be calling it a crisis, it's not unlikely the problems will be mentioned in price calculators for the goods on supermarket shelves.

Glass makers report a shortage of soda ash, a prime ingredient. Refinery allocations and higher prices are trimming production of the oil-derived plastics, polystyrene and polyethylene. Heavy demand for tin plate and paper are creating bottlenecks as well.

Packagers are having to dip into inventories and wait longer for new shipments, industry spokesmen say. Yet there seems little worry at the food stores.

"By late spring or summer of this year there will be container shortages in the U.S. because of raw material shortages and possible energy cutbacks," says one respected Wall Street analyst, more bearish than most.

"Manufacturers who have the ability to switch from one material to another are weighing one shortage against the other," says a plastics producer.

Where possible, packagers are converting to less scarce supplies, like substituting paper milk cartons for plastic ones. But the overall tightness and investment in specialized machinery is stopping most from changing over, analysts say.

Different factors are affecting supplies in this varied industry, which produces "tin" cans (made mostly of steel), paper wrapping and boxes, glass bottles, plastic jugs and liners.

"Steel will be a seller's market in 1974," says the National Canners Association. "Domestic lead times on tin plate are much longer than ever experienced and some new customers may have trouble obtaining products."

The study saw no "major breakthrough" in increasing tin plate production this year.

The closing of several synthetic soda ash plants for environmental reasons has given some bottle makers headaches. Sand and soda ash are principal ingredients in glass.

Plastic packaging materials are extremely tight, says an official with Continental Can Co., a major container manufacturer. "It's difficult to get plastics, from resins to feedstocks," he says.

Makers of paper containers also report shortages, offset in part by the ability to switch grades of paper without converting machinery.

Observers see paper picking up some of the current demand from other materials, but say that paper mills also are working against production limits.

Housing group cancels its meeting here

The Sedalia Housing Authority cancelled its regularly scheduled March meeting Monday night after a quorum of three members failed to show up for the meeting.

Chairman E. Glenn Lewis and Clyde Robinson were the only Housing Authority members to attend the meeting, along with executive director Marvin Albright.

One member, Mrs. Morris Walker, recently resigned from the group, with no one being named to replace her as yet, and the other two members, Keith Rowland and Bill Montgomery, reportedly had other commitments.

Members of the Housing Authority are planning to travel to Kansas City Thursday to discuss the Authority's 1974 budget with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Lewis said.

He said they hope to obtain approval of the budget at the meeting.

Short course focuses on pre-retirement

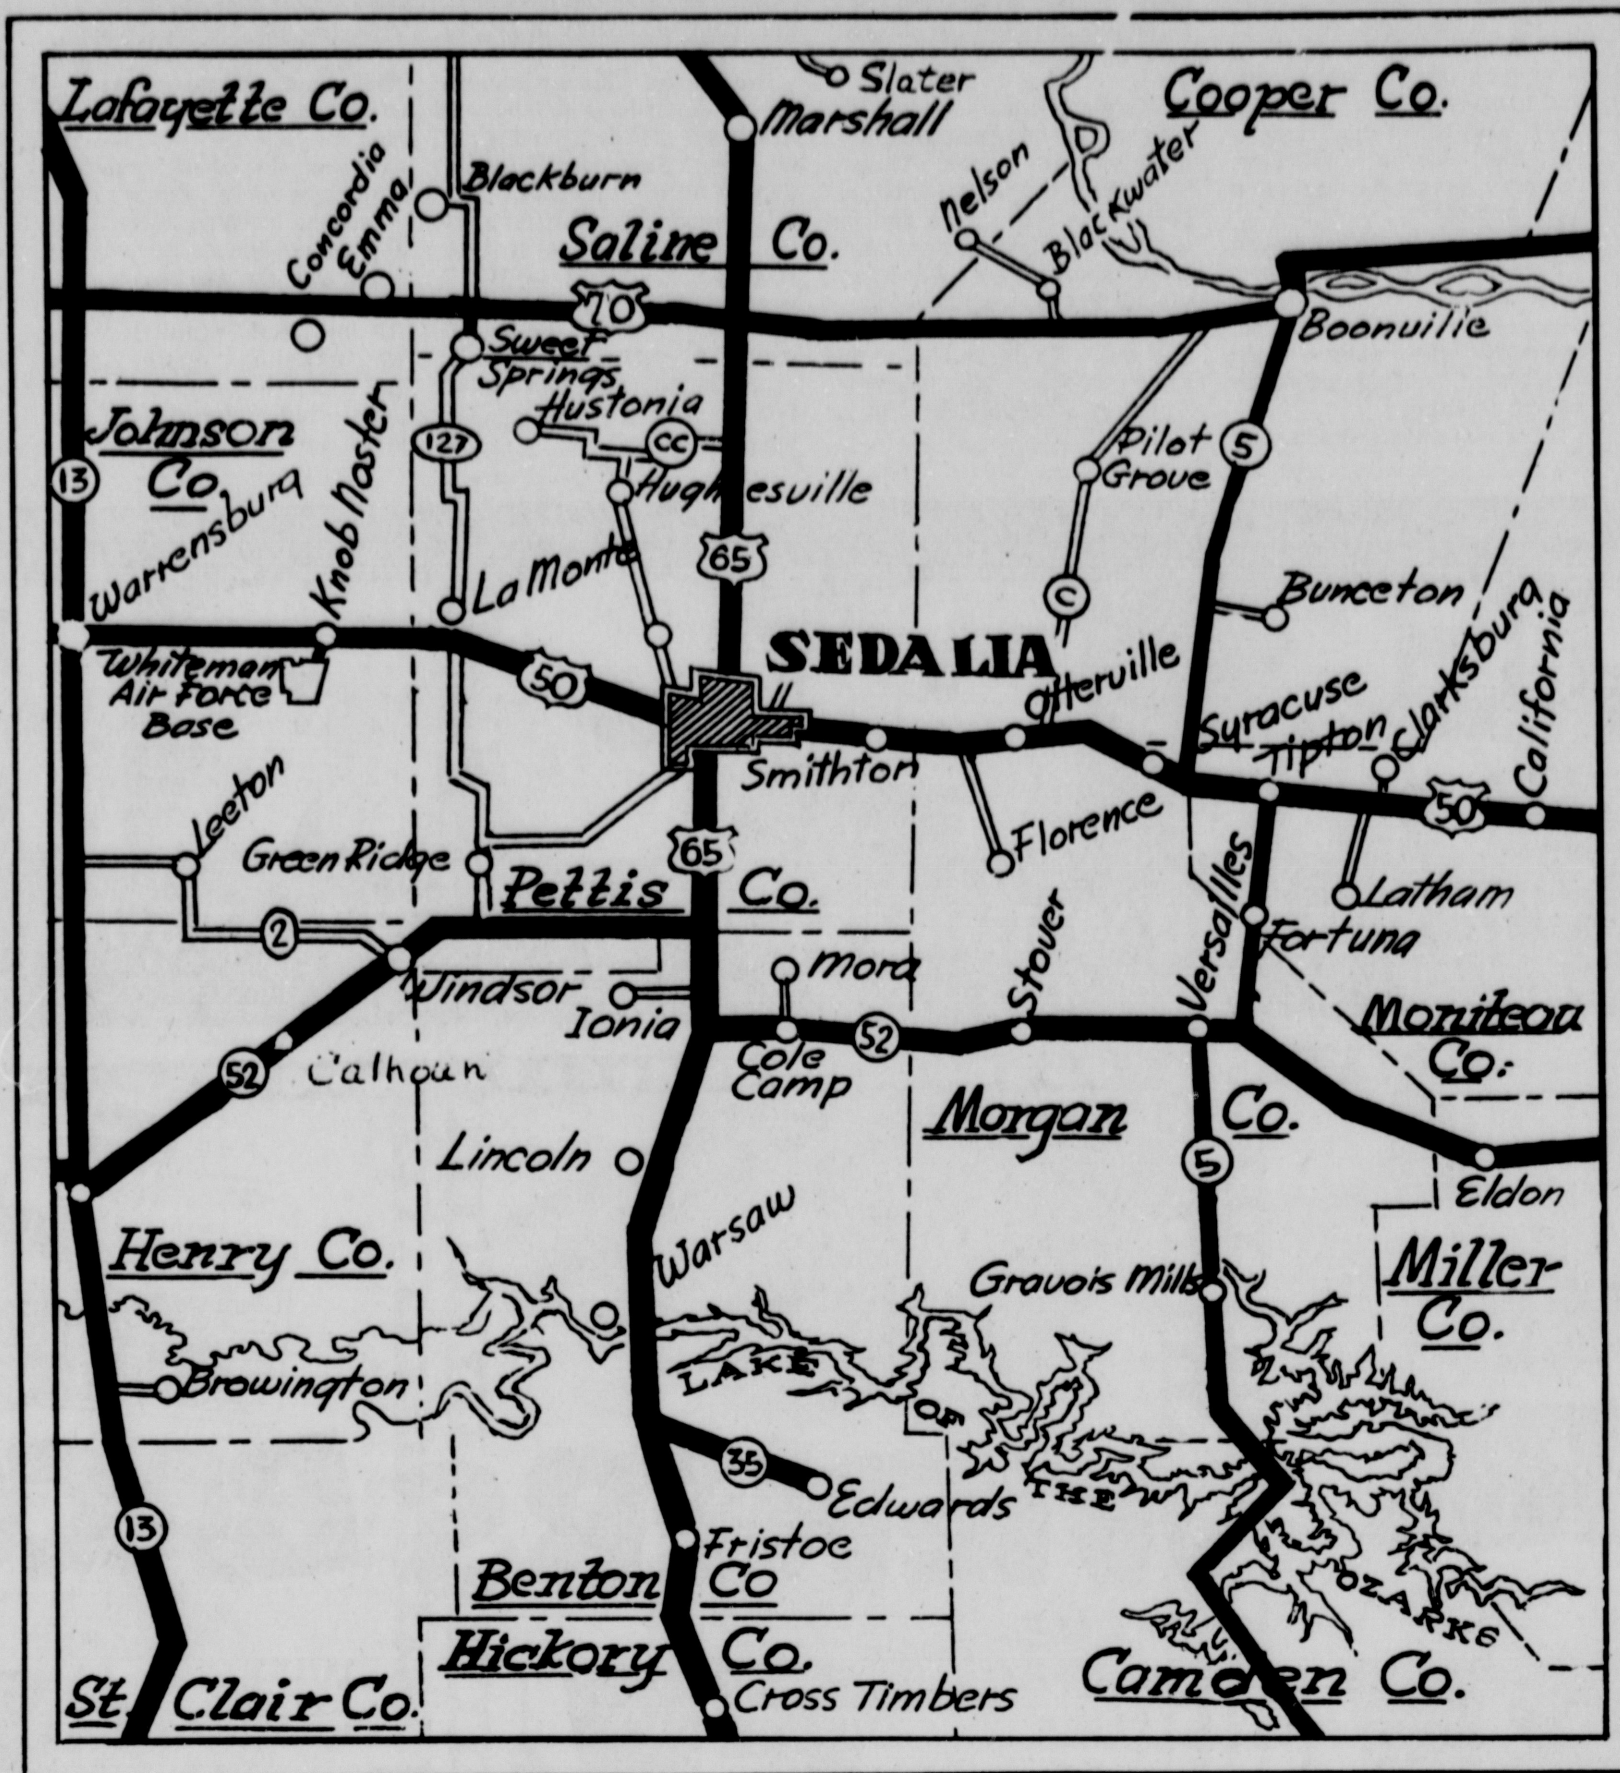

A four-session, short course on pre-retirement will be held at 7:30 p.m. on consecutive Thursdays beginning April 18 at the Sedalia Public Library.

The course, sponsored by the Pettis County University of Missouri Extension Center, is designed for persons who are planning to retire or who have recently retired, regardless of age.

The course is sponsored in cooperation with the Pettis County Council on Aging, the Sedalia Public Library, the Boonslick Regional Library, the American Association of Retired People, the Sedalia Recreation Department and the Social Security Administration.

Enrollment deadline is April 11. Additional information may be obtained from the Extension office.

Life in prison taught man the meaning, importance of patience

Back from loneliness

Walking hand in hand are Millard Good and his wife, Hazel June, of Spencer, W. Va. It's a simple pleasure they went without for nearly 20 years while Good lived in hiding after walking away from prison in 1954 until last fall. "I never gave up trying to clear his name," said Mrs. Good, whose hair turned white during those lonely years. "All I want right now is to spend what's left of my life with my wife and children," says Good. (AP)

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer
SPENCER, W.VA. (AP) — Millard Good is a creation of life, that master sculptor. After 58 years, his face is deeply chiseled, his hands are scarred and work-shaped and his eyes carry the reflection of 7,000 lonely nights.

But the voice is quiet and gentle.

"Yep, I just failed my driver's test," he says softly. "The poles weren't placed far enough apart for my big, ol' car. It's nothing. It just means I've got to wait seven days before I can try again."

There was no impatience. Millard Good, if anything, is patient. He learned it during the 19 years he was Delbert Shamblin.

Good became Shamblin one July evening back in 1954 when he walked away from the West Virginia Penitentiary and a 20-year sentence.

"I was at Camp Fairchance at the time, a full trusty. I was working outside the fence and wasn't due to go back until 9 o'clock. It had got to the point where I had to leave, so, about 5 that evening I put down my tools and walked away."

He paused, then continued in a monotone.

"I was 16 days getting to Parkersburg ... kept getting lost in the woods, and because I couldn't swim, I'd have to hunt out places where I could get across the creeks. I didn't have anything to eat but two hamburgers and a few green apples I'd find every once in a while. I'd have starved to death without those apples."

"Late one night at Parkersburg I crossed the river into Ohio and worked my way along doing odd jobs and sleeping in barns. I'd almost reached Columbus when I was lucky enough to meet a good farmer who wanted somebody to work. I stayed with him most of the next 19 years and had my own room over a cellar house. When I wasn't working I spent a lot of time in the woods hunting."

The farm where Good lived his secret life was just 100 miles west of the home in which Good's wife and two sons spent those lonely years. After Good's arrest in 1951, they had moved in with Mrs. Good's parents near Spencer, in central West Virginia. Good had been a bricklayer and home owner in another West Virginia town. And then, one day, he was arrested on a charge of armed robbery.

"I was falsely accused of robbing an elderly farm couple down in Mason County," he said. "Why, until I was put in jail there, I had never been in Mason County before ... never had seen the inside of a jail ... never had even gotten a traffic ticket. I was innocent but I couldn't get anybody to believe me."

"I had $454 on me when I was arrested, but it was money I'd saved up and at my trial I accounted for every penny of it," he said. "But the judge and my grandfather had had a falling out years before and I paid for it."

He was taken to the prison at Moundsville. He had been there for three years and seven months when he walked away.

"I never had a single mark on my record while I was in prison," he said, "and that's pretty hard to do. They let me out every day to work and lots of nights I'd come in and have to rattle the bars at midnight to get back inside. They were as good to me as they were to anyone and I hated to break their trust, but my life had been threatened and my life came first."

The Goods had to sell their home to meet legal expenses and shortly after her husband went to prison, Hazel June — at that time an attractive young woman with raven-black hair — took her two young sons to live with her parents.

"We never knew for sure whether he was alive all those years," she said. "But I never gave up trying to clear his name."

Good gave his wife a little hug.

"God bless her, she never gave up on me. Many was the time I was tempted to write her, but I was too scared. I was afraid I'd have to go back and I just couldn't stand the thought. I used to get the Charleston paper every chance I could to see if I could find out anything about my family and I chose the name Delbert Shamblin because Delbert is my son's name and Shamblin is my mother's ... It was as close as I could get to being with them."

"During the time I was in Ohio, my daddy, my brother and my sister all died. My boys grew up and her hair (he said, gesturing to his wife) turned to white. I sat down lots of times and thought to myself I'd just go ahead and die. But then I'd think about my wife and my children ..."

He shrugged and looked at his wife. They were seated in the living room in the parsonage of the St. John's United Methodist Church in Spencer. The minister, the Rev. Carl Dodrill, helped Good shed his false identity and return to his wife and family, which now includes six grandchildren.

There was an intermediary, a man who somehow knew that Delbert Shamblin was Millard Good.

"I first was contacted about Mr. Good three years ago by a friend of his," said the Rev. Dodrill. "But I did not give it much thought at the time. The fellow was a friend of Mr. Good's in Ohio and I don't know how he learned about the story. I didn't ask him. The friend had the feeling that Mr. Good had been misjudged and something ought to be done."

"Then, when Mrs. Good contacted me a year later, I began to make some inquiries into the case and became convinced the man had a valid argument. It was a long and drawn out process and I went to Charleston and met with the governor a half a dozen times. At first he was skeptical, but after he had his staff make some inquiries, it finally reached the point where he said he wanted to see Mr. Good sitting across a desk from him."

The Rev. Dodrill said it was pure coincidence that he was contacted by both Mrs. Good and Good's friend. During two years of investigation, the Rev. Dodrill didn't tell Mrs. Good that he had learned her husband was alive and working near Columbus, Ohio. "I couldn't see any reason to build up her hopes," he said.

But with Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. interested and ready to talk with Good, the Rev. Dodrill had her place an advertisement in the personals column of the Columbus newspapers.

"I spotted it right away," said Good. "I always checked the papers. I called the number she had put in the paper and came home the day before we went down to the governor's office. It was the first time we had been together in nearly 20 years."

That day, last Oct. 4, was the day Delbert Shamblin disappeared and Millard Good reappeared.

"He was given probation, but I'm sure that before long it will be a full pardon," said the Rev. Dodrill. Good worked for a while on the maintenance crew of a state hospital, but arthritis forced him to retire.

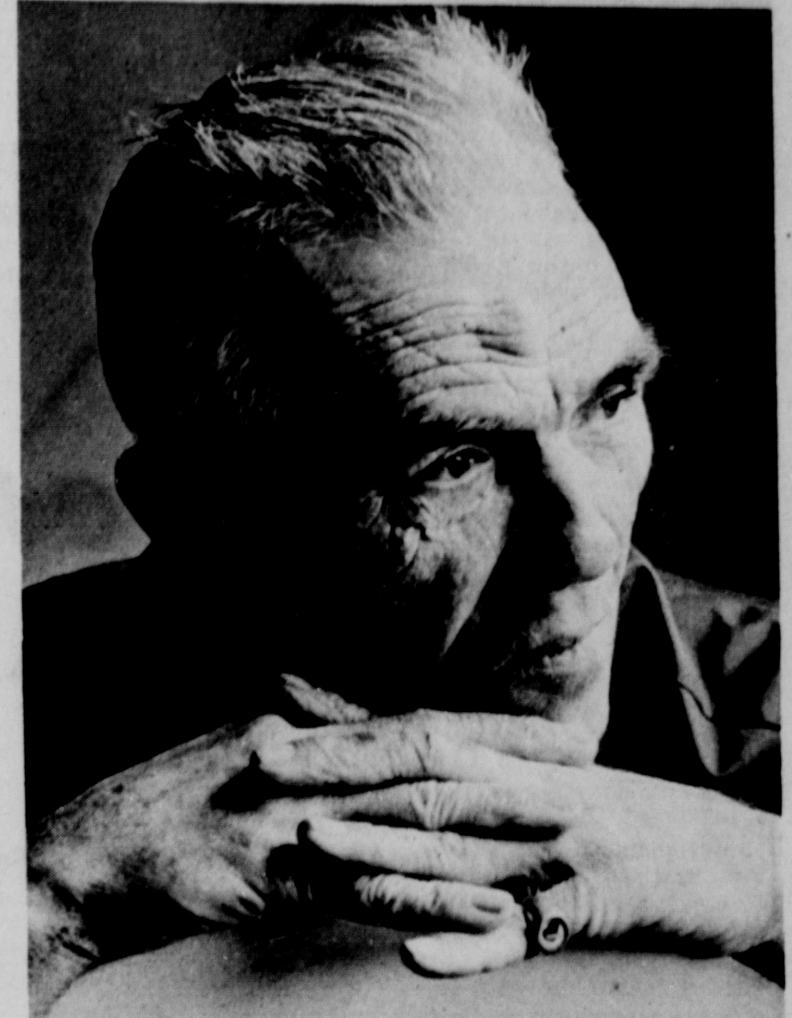

"You know, the thing that amazed me," the Rev. Dodrill said, "was Mr. Good's lack of bitterness. When the governor told him he was free, he said he wasn't angry with anybody."

Another person who speaks highly of Good is the man who owns the farm where Delbert Shamblin lived and worked. He still keeps track of Shamblin-Good.

"He never seemed to want to talk about his life when he was here and nobody pushed him," the man said. "He was like a member of our family after all those years and when he told me his story just a few weeks ago, I'll admit it came as a surprise."

"Lots of people have been good to me," Good said. "And all I want right now is to spend what's left of my life with my wife and children."

A resurrected identity

Millard Good, pictured in Spencer, W. Va., is back from 19 years as Delbert Shamblin — the false identity he assumed after walking away in 1954 from the West Virginia Penitentiary and a 20 years sentence. He came out of hiding last fall and now, at 58, he's free, on probation, and in hopes of getting a full pardon. (AP)

Has honest politics gone thataway?

By TOM TIEDE
WASHINGTON (NEA) — Although it is not a complete tally, the Justice Department's statistical summation of official corruption for 1973 seems to confirm what headlines have intimated for months: The nation's motto is changing from E Pluribus Unum to Omnis Idem Faciunt — "Everybody's Doing It."

The courts and jailhouses are filling up with busted public servants. Some parole board records read like pages out of Who's Who. No one seems to have a precise listing of the disgraced and scandalized former officials — the Justice Department says its own summary is "merely an indication of some federal investigation activity" — but it's clear the nation has experienced an unprecedented house cleaning of sticky-fingered political figures.

The federal extermination process has been bad enough. Spiro Agnew is still embroiled in disbarment proceedings. Federal judge and former Illinois governor Otto Kerner, convicted of taking a bribe, has been evicted from his chambers while awaiting appeal. Ex-Maryland senator Dan Brewster is resisting a conviction of accepting an illegal gratuity. And two of three former congressmen are serving time — one of them, Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey, is now known contemptuously as Rep. 78748-158.

Bad as the federal scandals have been, however, some individual states have been proportionately worse. Gallagher's New Jersey is with reason called the Republic's crookedest state. In a three-year stretch, the U.S. attorney's office there indicted 67 public officials and convicted 35.

At present in New Jersey, former Newark Mayor Hugh Addonizio is serving 10 years for extortion, a former secretary of state has been indicted for contract fixing, a former state treasurer has been indicted for misconduct in office, John V. Kenney, Jersey City's ex-mayor and one of the nation's most powerful political bosses, has been convicted of extortion. The president of the Newark City council is facing trial for mail fraud. Nelson Gross, once director of a federal drug investigation unit, has been indicted on a bewildering and depressing list of alleged chicanery.

It's the same in Maryland and a half dozen other locations. Some of the defendants are household names, such as John Mitchell and Agnew. Others are not: William Bieber, zoning director of Wheeling, Ill., charged with extortion; Eldon Studebaker, mayor of Bedford, Pa., charged with mail fraud; Melvin Wodzinski, city council president of Lackawanna, N.J., charged with extortion. From village trustees to a North Carolina sheriff and some 70 Chicago housing officials, the scandal list goes on and on.

While admittedly incomplete, the Justice Department's tabulation of defendants is the best available. Its present listing carries names of 350 public officers who've been indicted or convicted in the past three years. Several states have scores of ex-officials currently in the slammer. One U.S. attorney who keeps an eye on the national proceedings believes "as many as a thousand" present or former political functionaries may be under indictment or in jail.

Whatever the count, prosecutors hope it goes even higher. "We have," sighs a Justice lawyer, "a lot of thugs in government."

But apparently the political thugs are no more numerous than before. Just more visible. "I don't think political honesty has fallen so much," says a Maryland federal attorney, "what has happened is that everybody has just gotten sick of keeping the hacks in office — the law, the people, everybody has gotten fed up."

Indeed, the climate for prosecution has been fair since the beginning of the Seventies. Pinched by inflation and taxes, citizens are no longer willing to wink at bureaucrats who have hands in the public till. Because of this, some new and aggressive U.S. attorneys have found increased cooperation with, and acceptance for, the deodorizing process.

"We had corruption and people who wanted to stop it 100 years ago," says former U.S. Attorney Herbert Stern, but it has taken Watergate and a final political disgust to bring about a real crackdown.

Thus it is that much of the present investigatory activity is not illuminating new corruption but old corruption. Says Tony Valukas, of Chicago's (federal) official corruption strike force:

"Many of the investigations we've recently completed were started years ago. What we have here is a case of a long-entrenched Democratic organization now being investigated by a Republican U.S. attorney (Jim Thompson). The old immunities are gone."

The question now, perhaps, is just how long the immunities will be out. Already some U.S.

prosecutors sense a softening of public attitude against the crackdown. "Maybe it's the energy crisis," says a New Jersey federal officer, "people are into other things. We don't get the supporting mail we once did. I think they're tired of reading about political crooks. Some of them are even beginning to think a lot of what we do is persecution."

Authorities view even a slight change in the public mood as unfortunate. New Jersey's Stern, now a federal judge, points to the past to assess the importance of the present day public resolve: it was Lincoln Steffens in his 1904 book "Shame of the Cities" who wrote:

"We (the citizenry) are responsible (for corruption), not our leaders, since we follow them and we let them divert our loyalties."

Given the obvious extent of corruption in modern public office, no one wants Steffens' truth to spread the land again.

Lack of beef hits animals

SAO PAULO, Brazil, (AP) — Brazil's beef shortage is inflicting hardships on the animal kingdom in Sao Paulo State Park, hitting at the highest and lowest levels.

The king of beasts in the lion habitat has been forced to accept a diet of liver and tongue in place of his customary lean, red beef.

In the neighboring zoo, lowly rabbits and ducks are losing their lives in the effort to provide the tigers and hyenas with beef substitutes.

Outside the park, housewives line up early in supermarkets to buy scarce steaks and roasts, while other shoppers settle for hot dogs and chicken.

The beef shortage is blamed largely on a disagreement between the government and meat suppliers over pricing. The government set a price that the suppliers considered too low, so much Brazilian beef has been kept in storage awaiting better prices.

As a result, the 30 lions in "Simba Safari" at the state park get front-quarter beef only once a week. The other six days the lions eat beef liver, heart, tongue and other parts for which they show little enthusiasm.

"A hungry lion becomes very dangerous and aggressive," said Francisco Galvao, owner of Simba Safari. "That's why we go to the trouble of obtaining the innards through the packing house of a friend."

Friday is the day when the lions are served beef flesh, which used to be their daily fare. Tourists who drive through the natural setting to see the lions can watch them disputing over the once-a-week treat.

"The Sao Paulo zoo is increasing the raising of rats, chickens, ducks and rabbits, which also serve as food for the carnivores," Autuori said.

He said fish from the zoo's ponds are also being used to feed the tigers, lions, hyenas and other meat-eaters.

Horse meat is not used as a beef substitute, he said, because horse suppliers prefer to export the meat to Japan and the United States, where they get a better price.

WORLD ALMANAC FACTS

The old farm subsidy system with acreage restrictions and government purchases to keep prices up was ended Aug. 10, 1973. A new program set "target prices" for wheat, feed grains and cotton, and farmers would get aid when prices fell below the target. It was felt farmers would plant more to meet food shortages, have an assured income and, with current high prices, the program would cost taxpayers nothing. The World Almanac notes.

Art Buchwald

Case of the White House streakers

WASHINGTON — "Mr. President, you know those seven people who were arrested for streaking through the Watergate fountain last week?"

"I read about it in the newspaper, John."

"It turns out several of them worked for the White House."

"Why didn't I know about this sooner?"

Buchwald

"Well, Mr. President, we thought we could keep it from you. It is our belief that it would be unwise to have the President of the United States involved with streaking and all its implications."

"I am very disturbed that anyone on my staff would run nude through the Watergate fountain. Why did they do it, John?"

"They thought it would help you in the polls. The problem now, Mr. President, is that the people arrested say if we don't help them they're going to reveal that we've been streaking in the White House for the last six months. If that gets out, we're going to be in a lot of trouble."

"That's blackmail, John. What are our options?"

"We could pay the money to them to hush them up."

"How much would it cost, John?"

"Taking into consideration their lawyers' fees and what it would cost to care for their families, I would say $1 million."

"We could raise that easily, John. What are our other options?"

"We could say we streaked in the White House for national security reasons. We had to hire streakers because the FBI refused to streak for us, and the CIA under their mandate could streak only in a foreign country. Our streakers were hired to find out what other streakers were up to. As President it was your constitutional duty to see that the people in this country did not discard all their clothes and run around in their birthday suits."

"I see. Do we have any other options?"

"We could refuse to pay the money to the defendants and let them reveal the streaking that went on here. We could say that a few members of your staff did run nude through the halls, but no one had ever streaked through the Oval Office. As soon as you heard about it you ordered an investigation of the streaking and insisted that those who did it had to resign!"

"What if it turns out that my closest aides were involved in the streaking, John?"

"There's that possibility, Mr. President. I saw two of the men you hold in the highest esteem run naked through Rose Mary Woods' office the other night."

"Have you ever streaked, John?"

"Yessir, I have, Mr. President. One afternoon while I was working on some legislation for you, I suddenly took off all my clothes and went running on the White House lawn. The Secret Service caught me just as I was going over the fence."

"You had better go to Camp David,

John, and write a full report for me."

"I'll do that, Mr. President. Now to get back to the people who were caught streaking at the Watergate. We do have another option. We could offer them executive clemency."

"How could we justify that, John?"

"We could say they were nudists on their way to sunbathe on the Potomac, and they cut through the Watergate complex to save time."

"Sure we could, John. But if I start giving executive clemency for streaking I could lose my mandate."

"Then what should we do, Mr. President?"

I could try to hush the whole thing up. Or I could tough it out. But I have a third option, John. Pat and I could streak down Pennsylvania Avenue tomorrow at high noon — BUT THAT, JOHN, WOULD BE WRONG."

A conservative view

Nixon has loyalists out there

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

DAYTON, OHIO — It was one of those television talk shows in which questions are fielded both by telephone and from a live audience in the studio. A pretty young housewife stood up in the back row. This was her question: "Why do you newspaper guys keep picking on my President?"

Kilpatrick

Her blue eyes were glistening with the first hint of tears, but her voice rang with loyalty and conviction. With a gulp, she said her husband might kill her for speaking out in public, but Nixon was the first President she had ever had a chance to vote for, and she thought he was doing a fine job, especially in foreign affairs. Why didn't we write about the good things he was doing, and stop harping on the Watergate thing? She didn't care what he might have done — everybody else in politics did the same things. She was for him, right or wrong.

About half the studio audience burst into applause. Because it was more of a speech than a question, we let it slide, and the show went on.

It is important to any understanding of the current political scene to keep this young woman in mind. Her name is Legion. The Gallup Poll and the Harris Survey doubtless are correct, statistically speaking, in their finding that only 27 to 30 per cent of the people still have great confidence in the President. My guess is that the mute figures fail to articulate the passionate, stubborn, unwavering devotion of the President's admirers.

My mail in recent weeks tends to reinforce that impression.

A gentleman in Bay Village, Ohio, describes himself as 87 years old, married for 62 years, concerned for this great-grandchildren. "Don't you think the public has been brain-washed enough? I blame the Democrats for everything."

A woman in Glenview, Ill., writes for her husband as well: "In our opinion, President Nixon's conduct in the so-called scandals is beyond reproach, and his record in five years of government of this nation on principles, on decency and on constitutionality is the finest in America's noble history. Any clear-thinking person will recognize 'Watergate' for what it is, to wit, a liberal media vendetta against Mr. Nixon, whom they have always hated, because he has done much to frustrate their mania for one-worldism and a Socialistic America."

A gentleman in Memphis, Tenn., echoes a refrain that turns up repeatedly in my pro-Nixon mail: Even if Mr. Nixon knew about Watergate, "that is not half as bad as what Ted Kennedy was involved in and no one even mentioned removing him from office." This same correspondent also denounces Congress: "Anyone there has payoff in some way or other. Everyone knows this."

"I think it is high time all you writers of the free press get together and get Mr. Nixon on the road to doing the job I voted for him to do," says my Memphis correspondent. "If the election was tomorrow I would vote again for him because I think he is a great American and is doing great things for America."

Those are fair random samples of a pro-Nixon sentiment that seems rarely to be acknowledged. To be sure, my anti-Nixon mail also increases in volume and in passion, but these voices are abundantly recognized. Indeed, to read the pundits and the pollsters, with their incessant accent upon the negative, you might imagine these are the only voices being raised.

My point is this: Something in the neighborhood of 20 million voters still love the President. They make up a sobering political force. And unless members of the House of Representatives proceed with the most scrupulous care in their slow progress toward impeachment, the 20 million will be heard from in ways that will astonish. The polls don't tell all the story. A part of the story comes from the young woman in blue, in the back row, asking why we keep picking on her President.

Bicentennial plans

President Nixon has called upon the nation to set aside the problems of the times and pitch in to make the nation's 200th birthday anniversary a memorable occasion.

Certainly the nation's spirit has been depressed by a succession of crises—the energy shortage, economic problems, Watergate and related scandals in the national political arena. The latter promises to dog us for some time to come, as the many cases drag on through the courts.

Still, we should be reminded that the nation is bigger than Watergate, and that we will survive this challenge to the system just as we have numerous others in the now nearly 200-year history of the United States.

To this extent, President Nixon's call to observe our Bicentennial in a fitting manner deserves our support and individual efforts.

The President envisions "tens of thousands of individual celebrations," instead of a "made in Washington" format for the whole country.

Locally, the Pettis County Historical Society has called a meeting for next Tuesday, the first in a series of monthly public sessions to drum up interest and explore ways of making the Bicentennial a going concern here, where we live.

A healthy display of public interest in this regard will be a necessary preliminary step.

Legion anniversary

This month the American Legion is observing its 55th anniversary. It was at a meeting of representatives of the various outfits of the A.E.F. of World War I, convening at Paris, that the organization of war veterans was born in 1919.

Today — 55 years and three wars later — The American Legion is still actively engaged in the pursuit of a goal which could mean its eventual demise. With a membership of some 2.7 million men and women, all veterans of wars of this century, the Legion remains dedicated to principles that could bring about that long-sought era when there would be no more war veterans from which its membership could be drawn.

The American Legion is using the occasion of its 55th anniversary to muster increasing strength to meet the responsibilities which will challenge it in the years ahead. For the American Legion, this anniversary is a time to make sure it will "Be Counted Again"—as its theme states—as it strives to meet its responsibilities to the veterans and their families and to fulfill its obligation to serve community, state and nation.

On its 55th birthday, we extend our own congratulations to Legionnaires everywhere and, especially to those of Pettis County Post No. 16 and Clay T. Henderson Post No. 98 here in Sedalia.

They shall beat their swords into drills and their spears into oil drums.

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Donald Nixon, the President's likeable, loquacious, wheeler-dealer brother, got a $100,000 personal loan from a California builder at a time when the builder was seeking federal business.

This is the second substantial loan which Donald Nixon has wrangled from government contractors. In late 1956, while his brother was vice president, Donald secured a $205,000 loan from billionaire defense contractor Howard Hughes.

Our disclosure of the Hughes loan became a major issue in Richard Nixon's defeats for president in 1960 and governor of California in 1962.

Now we have learned that Donald received a $100,000 check, dated Aug. 4, 1971, from Lloyd Hallamore, then president of Hallamore Homes Inc.

Securities and Exchange Commission records show that in July 1971, Donald was also appointed a director of a closely affiliated Hallamore firm, San-Bar Electronics Corp.

My associate, George Clifford, infiltrated a Hallamore meeting in July 1971 and heard Donald Nixon boast of his efforts to get contracts to build Hallamore homes.

The firm wound up a few months later with a $4,721,000 subcontract to construct modular homes at 18 Air Force bases. But the firm's president, Harold Anderson, who is also Lloyd Hallamore's son-in-law, denied that Don Nixon had anything to do with arranging the Air Force contract.

Reluctantly conceding that a $100,000 personal loan had been made, Anderson insisted to us: "The loan had absolutely nothing to do with the operation of Hallamore Inc." The $100,000, he also swore, has been repaid.

Meanwhile, we have discovered that President Nixon's former aide, John Ehrlichman, personally checked on the Hallamore firm because of Don Nixon's investment. Ehrlichman, traveled with presidential pal Bebe Rebozo to make a quiet survey of the Hallamore operations in

Merry-go-round

California at about the time Don Nixon got the loan.

We wrote about Don's dealings with the Hallamores but never learned until now about the $100,000 loan. Its exact purpose still remains a mystery.

SECRET STRATEGY: The environmental laws will be suspended to permit the development of any project related to "energy or its uses" if President Nixon's secret strategy is successful.

This would mean atomic plant construction, offshore oil drilling and shale and strip mining could be pursued without any safeguards or public recourse.

The strategy to undermine environmental laws in the name of the energy crisis is being plotted behind closed doors in the byzantine old Executive Office Building next to the White House. We have gone behind those doors to get the story.

At the latest session, deputy budget chief Frank Zarb presided. He outlined five options for the group to discuss, including a proposal from the President that the National Environmental Policy Act be suspended for projects relating to energy.

Clearing his throat, Undersecretary of the Interior John Whitaker, a former oil executive, suggested that instead of suspending the environmental act that they move merely to change the environmental guidelines. This would produce the same result with less uproar.

White House aide Richard Fairbanks interrupted with a loud complaint about "environmental kooks." He snorted: "When the lights go out, people don't give a damn about the environment."

Yet Fairbanks, incredibly, is President Nixon's top aide for environmental affairs.

No 'dumb dumb' school

I would like to comment on the article of Friday, March 8, titled, "Hubbard school issue discussed."

To begin with, I have a 10-year-old son who attends Hubbard School. He has a learning disability ... I feel very fortunate that Hubbard was there, as my child has benefitted from its services. The article stated that these children would soon be labeled because they attend classes at Hubbard. I do not believe that these children or the school will ever be classified as "dumb dumb." If so, it will only be by those who are bigots and dumb themselves. These children are not dumb. They do know that they have something that keeps them from learning and they should.

...There was a comment about the size of the classroom being only five or six in number. They can only have 10 children to one classroom, this is mandatory.

I would suggest to anyone who is interested in seeing how Hubbard school is being utilized, to make a visit and see first hand what this learning disability center is trying to accomplish. I for one am thankful for the ... school being there when my child needed it, and also to Mr. George Marsh and his fine faculty and their dedication to these children.

Failure should not frighten

By AUSTIN PARDUE

So much emphasis is placed nowadays on the importance of achieving great success in life that I wonder sometimes what becomes of all the people who sometimes have to settle for less, people who know the meaning of that grim word failure.

How do they stand it? How do they adjust? How do they come back from the deep discouragement that failure — or apparent failure — often brings?

I think perhaps I have something to say to such people, because in my time I have had more than a nodding acquaintance with failure.

First, let me give you a text from Job that in my opinion deserves the attention of all sincere people who meet with failure. "He bindeth the floods from overflowing; and the thing that is hid bringeth He forth to light." What are the floods, viewed in this context?

They are the surging, devastating floods of defeatism and despair that so often follow failure. And what is "the thing that is hid?" That's what I want to talk about.

I started out in life as a resounding academic failure. In grammar school, where we were seated in order of our grades, I usually sat in the right rear corner seat — the lowest in the class of about 40 or 50. And I discovered that if you sit in the lowest seat long enough, you begin to have a pretty poor opinion of your future possibilities.

I had to go to summer school to get through grammar school, which must be some kind of a record for academic density. I never did graduate from high school. When World War I came along, I left school to enlist at age 17.

After the war, I decided I wanted to go into the ministry. I found that if you had been in the service, you could enter college without a high school diploma, so I went to Hobart, a fine old Episcopal college at Geneva, N.Y.

One day the president of the college called me in and said, "I'm not sure you should be here; I'm going to give you an I.Q. test." I took the test, and apparently it claimed to prove that I was about a middle-grade moron.

The president called me in again and said, "Pardue, you'll never get through college. You'll never be a minister. You just can't make it."

The next fall I tried again at

Austin Pardue

Hobart, and the same thing happened. Another I.Q. test. Another disaster.

The president said, "Pardue, what you should be is a farmer, or one who works with his hands (not one of my gifts). Anyway, you shouldn't be here." So I was out for the second time.

I tried another small college called St. Stevens, and the president, there was cordial. "We'll send for your credentials," he said. "I haven't any," I answered.

"In that case," he said, "what makes you think you can come here?"

"I don't know," I said. "I believe that God has a plan for me and maybe your college is part of it."

Well, they let me enter, but that didn't work out either. I could not make the grade. Before long I was asked to leave.

When I returned home to Chicago, I still felt that somehow, ordination to the Episcopal priesthood could and would be achieved even though I was without money, academic credentials or powerful backers. My kindly rector just about gave up on me, but the curate at my parish church listened to my story.

He told me that he had gone through a somewhat similar experience and wrote on my behalf to the dean of Nashotah House, an Episcopal seminary which had a special preparatory department for men without college degrees.

I went there and eventually the dean asked me the most important question I had ever been asked: Had I ever had a careful eye examination? I had not.

He made an appointment with an oculist in Milwaukee who was amazed that I could study at all. My vision was very good, but my muscular focus almost nil, a condition later diagnosed as dyslexia. I was given a prism, and did endless exercises. A burden of inferiority was lifted. Since grade school I had been convinced that I must be stupid.

Finally I did learn to study and I did graduate from a theological seminary and I did become an Episcopal priest and bishop.

Now, I am sure God has a sense of humor, and you can see it in the first chapter of First Corinthians, verse 27, where Paul says: "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."

Now forgive me, I'm not boasting, but today, even without high school or college diplomas, I have five honorary doctoral degrees, and have published 10 books, which proves that God has a sense of humor.

But I also think it proves something else, which brings me to the remainder of that test about "the thing that is hid." I think the thing that is hid very often is a gift that the individual has that he doesn't even suspect himself.

No matter how low an opinion of yourself you may have, the Bible will tell you that there are all kinds of gifts and each of us has some of them.

I think that all of us should remember this when failure strikes, or seems to strike. Just because you fail at one thing doesn't mean that you will fail at another.

Education really means to draw out the mysterious hidden qualities within an individual.

The truth is, there are many things an I.Q. test can't tell you. It can't measure how much creative imagination a person has, or how much drive, or how much burning desire to do or be something.

It can't determine how much willingness a person has to cooperate with other people, or how much latent leadership he has, or how much perseverance he may possess. These are gifts of God.

So seek your gift, and keep looking for it diligently. Don't let failure discourage or dishearten you. Sometimes the way is long, painful and hard but by the grace of God, and with a belief in the guidance of His Holy Spirit, He will show you how it can be done.

Arrow Rock pageant now a screen play

(Democrat-Capital Service)

ARROW ROCK — A pageant originally presented here in 1970 has been rewritten as a screen play and will be turned into a motion picture.

Author of the screen play, "Portrait of a Giant," is Jay Turley, an Arrow Rock native and owner of the Black Sheep Inn restaurant here. The original pageant was entitled, "Pot of Gold," and is a romantic epic of early pioneers traveling the Santa Fe Trail from Arrow Rock to the New Mexico Territory.

The central figure of the film is Jesse B. Turley, an ancestor of the author. Jay Turley is co-producer of the film, and will play the role of Kit Carson.

Production of the film by Murray Enterprises, Los Angeles, is expected to begin in a few months. It will be filmed in California.

Accident leads to capture

EDWARDSVILLE, Ill. (AP) — An automobile accident in northeast Missouri Monday led to the arrest of two men, who were charged in connection with the weekend abduction and robbery of a Granite City, Ill., couple.

Authorities said Donald DuBoise, 28, of Salem, Mo., was arrested after a car in which he was apparently riding went out of control near Bowling Green and slammed into an embankment.

Following DuBoise' arrest on two counts of armed robbery, Ronnie Woods, 25, of Granite City surrendered to Madison County Sheriff's deputies here. He was charged with armed robbery, unlawful restraint and theft over $150. Bond was set at $30,000 for both men.

The pair, according to authorities, was being sought along with a third man for the Saturday night abduction and robbery of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Tipwood.

The Tipwoods were watching television in their mobile home, police said, when three men entered, took $20, a television set and a camera, and then ordered the couple to leave with them.

Authorities said the Tipwoods were driven into Lincoln County, Mo. where they were finally released near Troy unharmed.

The third man believed to have participated in the abduction was still at large, police said.

Policy of Center is explained

"Now, anyone who walks through the door who needs us will be served," John Gruenloh, speech therapist for the past six years at the Children's Therapy Center, told Rotarians at their regular meeting Monday at the Ramada Inn.

The present policy, Gruenloh said, differs from the original policy formulated 18 years ago when the Center first opened, for then those needing Center services were referred to it by a medical doctor.

Gruenloh, with the aid of color slides, discussed the services offered by the Center, including evaluation and therapy for deficiencies in speech, hearing, motor coordination, visual perception, language, health and intelligence. These services are provided, he said, at no charge to the family, but are sometimes paid for by a third party, which is generally a referral agency with funds to pay for such treatment.

He discussed a child's evaluation and development program operated under a federal grant and operated quite apart from the Center program. Under the federally financed program covering youngsters from birth to eight years, early detection of a handicap, or deficiency, is sought and of prime importance because it will lend an opportunity to give children a chance for therapy and development at an early preschool age.

Gruenloh's talk covered operation of the Sheltered Workshop, located just south of the new Children's Therapy Center building at 14th and Ingram, and the operation of the Center's two vans which cover four schools in rural areas. These vans are equipped to provide evaluation by therapists of younger school children who may have speech, hearing, visual perception, motor coordination and health problems. A report is made to the school superintendent of the needs of children when such needs are detected.

After fielding questions at the close of his talk, Gruenloh expressed the appreciation of the Center staff to all those who make the operation of the Center possible by their contributions that underwrite much of the cost of the $120,000 annual operational budget.

Robert S. Johnson, program chairman, introduced the speaker.

Robert Phillips, club president, appointed James Edwards as music director of the club to serve out the remainder of the Rotary year in place of Merrill Strombom, who resigned his membership because his business activities demanded he be out-of-town on most meeting dates. Phillips announced that in addition to himself, Bruce McCully and Richard Lehmer would serve as official delegates at the Rotary District conference to be held at Tan-Tar-A March 15 to 17. He also called on Lloyd Banaka who presented a three minute biographical sketch.

Guests introduced by David Clingman were Lou Sosebee and James Postlethwaite, Rotary members of the Central Missouri State University faculty at Warrensburg, and student guests Joe Meives and James McMullin, of Sacred Heart High School.

Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

Hooked on nasal spray aerosol sprays into the throat.

Dear Dr. Lamb — I am a girl, 16. Lately several people have noticed that I've been breathing heavily. I never used to. It could be due to my weight. I'm five feet four and weigh 130 pounds.

It might also have to do with the fact that I just had a nose job a few months ago.

I'm a bit worried. Could you please tell me what causes this?

Dear Reader — Most likely it is from the nose job. In reducing the size of the nose the air passages are usually narrowed. The result is that the breathing through the nose is often not as easy. Forcing the air through the smaller passages results in more noise, just as water running rapidly through a narrow channel makes more noise. I'd ignore it unless you feel uncomfortable. If you have too much breathing difficulty, you may need to have the nasal passages enlarged. Some small noses are more of a decoration than a functional organ. (NEA)

Hearst pledges to meet demands

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) — Newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst says he will attempt to respond to the letter to demands made by the kidnapers of his daughter.

He pledged Monday to do "everything we can" to meet the Army's demand for the distribution of $70 worth of quality food for every needy resident of the San Francisco Bay area.

And he said he would try to arrange a nationally televised news conference for two imprisoned SLA "soldiers" as demanded by the terrorist group which kidnaped Patricia Hearst, 20, on Feb. 4.

Hearst admitted that his initial plan for a long-term food giveaway with which he hoped to gain negotiations for his daughter's release was a mistake.

The abductors said in their latest taped communication Saturday that Hearst's People In Need giveaway program was handing out "hog feed."

They also warned there would be no further communications from Miss Hearst until Joseph Remiro, 27, and Russell Little, 24, appear on a televised news conference.

Today's scheduled sixth food distribution was canceled and Hearst ordered a major overhaul of the $2 million giveaway program. Officials said the distribution could resume as early as Friday.

Hearst, editor and president of the San Francisco Examiner, said he would try to more closely parallel the original SLA demand for a one-month giveaway of top quality meat, produce and groceries rather than the current twice-a-week, long-range program.

"We made the initial mistake of thinking that a supplemental program that would last a long time would be more desirable than one that would be over rather quickly," he said. "We really shouldn't have done that because the demands were quite explicit at the beginning. We will now do everything we can to just do exactly what they say."

Hearst said he would do "everything I could to get them (Little and Remiro) on the air. They may tell me something that I don't know. And they may gradually become a conduit in which we can talk to the SLA."

Nixon re-election funds placed in trust account

By H.L. SCHWARTZ III

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Finance Committee to Re-elect the President, money manager for the richest political campaign in U.S. history, has closed its books and transferred $3.57 million to a trust account with a Washington bank.

The committee, which raised more than $60 million for President Nixon's re-election campaign, now is known as the 1972 Campaign Liquidation Trust.

It is administered by three trustees, including former Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans, who is on trial in New York along with former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell on charges arising from a secret $200,000 campaign contribution.

The other trustees, according to reports filed with the General Accounting Office, are Charles E. Potter, former U.S. senator from Michigan, and Guilford Dudley Jr., a Nashville, Tenn., insurance executive.

In a financial report to the GAO Monday, the trust listed six people on its payroll, including a secretary-treasurer, two assistants, two secretaries and Stans' after-tax salary through Feb. 28 was reported as $1,066.

He also was reported as drawing a $200 advance for an unstated purpose on Feb. 22, which was repaid six days later.

Paul E. Barrick, former treasurer of the Finance Committee and now secretary-treasurer of the trust, said Stans' $30,000-a-year salary had been discontinued at his own request during his New York trial.

Testimony began in the trial March 4.

Stans, chairman of the Finance Committee since its inception early in 1972, at one point was earning $60,000. This was cut in half after the election and after, according to Barrick, Stans began spending more and more time on personal legal problems.

Couple also says 'I do' to enlistment

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Mary Ann Brunt and Paul Foster said "I do" to each other. Then they said it to the U.S. Army.

In a double ceremony Monday, the Milford couple was married at the Armed Forces Entrance Examining Station and then enlisted in the service.

Mrs. Foster said they decided to enlist because "it's too hard to be married and live comfortably." She said the Army would give her and her husband the education needed to get good jobs.

The couple, in their early 20s, said they were talked into the "double ceremony" by a friend who is a civilian employee at the recruiting center.

UCLA moves up to second in poll

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
UCLA, which wrapped up the Pacific-8 conference title with an 82-52 triumph over Southern California last week, leapfrogged over Notre Dame into second place behind North Carolina State in the weekly Associated Press college basketball poll released Tuesday.

UCLA, the defending national champion with a 23-3 record through games of Saturday, will meet 20th-ranked Dayton in the NCAA's West regional semifinals Thursday night.

Dayton, 20-7, replaced NCAA Midwest host Oral Roberts in the poll after handing Notre Dame its second loss of the season, a 97-82 upset.

North Carolina State, which will seek to preserve its unbeaten record — best of the ranked teams — against No. 5 Providence in the NCAA East semifinals, received 24 first place votes and 792 points from a panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

UCLA, with three losses for the season, received 17 first place votes and 748 points while the Irish amassed 652 points for third place.

Maryland remained fourth in the poll despite its 103-100 loss to N. C. State in the Atlantic Coast Conference championship tournament Saturday night.

The loss ended the Terps' NCAA playoff hopes and their season at 23-5 since they declined a bid to the National Invitation Tournament.

Providence, eighth a week ago, improved its ranking with triumphs over Brown and Penn and losses by Vanderbilt, North Carolina and Southern Cal. The three teams had been fifth, sixth and seventh a week go.

Vanderbilt will take its No. 6 ranking against No. 8 Marquette in the Midwest Regional semifinals while seventh-ranked North Carolina will face Purdue in the second game of the NIT tournament at Madison Square Garden Saturday.

Through games of Saturday, Vanderbilt is 23-3, Marquette 23-4 and North Carolina 22-5.

Long Beach State, which already completed its season at 23-2, remained ninth, but Indiana, which edged Purdue 80-79, moved up from 13th to 10th. The Hoosiers' hopes for an NCAA berth against Notre Dame, however, were doused Monday night when they lost a Big Ten Conference playoff against 12th-ranked Michigan 75-67. The playoff between the conference co-champions was forced when Michigan beat Michigan State Saturday.

In the second 10 are Alabama, Michigan, Pittsburgh, Kansas, Southern Cal, Louisville, New Mexico, South Carolina, Creighton and Dayton.

Pittsburgh meets Furman in the NCAA East semifinals; Kansas and Creighton clash in one Midwest game while Louisville faces Oral Roberts in the other. New Mexico is scheduled to meet San Francisco in the West.

Grid Cards complete preseason schedule

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals announced their most ambitious preseason National Football League schedule today, featuring seven games beginning with a July 27 clash with the Buffalo Bills in the Pro Football Hall of Fame game in Canton, Ohio.

The club will play two of the preseason contests at home, Aug. 23 against the New York Jets in the annual Cardinal Glennon Hospital benefit game and a week later against the Minnesota Vikings.

Following the Saturday opening against Buffalo, the Cardinals will meet the Chicago Bears Aug. 3 at Champaign, Ill.; the Packers Aug. 10 at Green Bay, and the San Diego Chargers Aug. 17 at Memphis. St. Louis will close out its preseason play Sept. 6 against the Chiefs in Kansas City for the Governor's Cup.

MOBERLY, Mo. (AP) — Meramec Community College and Moberly Junior College decide here tonight which of the two will represent Region 16 in the national tournament next week. Meramec defeated Moberly, 67-65, in overtime Monday night with a tip-in by reserve forward Jim Dressler with six seconds remaining. The first of the best of three games was won last Thursday at Meramec by Moberly, 59-54.

The national tournament is March 19-23 at Hutchinson, Kan.

Tom Paciorek, who hit 262 in 96 games last year, could be used at first base or in the outfield.

But the outfield has an overflow of talent, including Willie Crawford, a 295 hitter last season; Wynn; Tommie Agee, acquired from St. Louis; Von Joshua, and Manny Mota, a 314 hitter in 89 games last year.

Don Sutton, 18-10, Andy Messersmith, 14-10, Tommy John, 16-7, and Al Downing, 9-9, are back from the 1973 starting pitching rotation.

Doug Rau, who started three games in 1973, is a candidate for a starting role and the Dodgers have reliever Jim Brewer, who has been in one of every three Los Angeles victories during the past five years. Knuckleballing Charlie Hough also will be used in relief.

Still it's Marshall who will be counted on the most in the bullpen.

He was 14-11 last year with a 2.66 earned run average, but he was not happy at Montreal, and the Dodgers were glad to get him despite having to give up an outstanding player in Davis.

Hank Aaron . . .
... caught in dispute

Kuhn steps in

Bowie Kuhn forces Aaron into lineup

NEW YORK (AP) — Hank Aaron apparently will be in the Atlanta Braves' opening day line-up after all.

That became a near certainty Monday when Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn disapproved the Braves' announced plan to have the 40-year-old slugger sit out the opening three-game series in Cincinnati April 4-6 and go after Babe Ruth's all-time record of 714 home runs in Atlanta when the Braves open at home April 8.

In a terse statement, Kuhn virtually ordered the Braves to have Aaron in the starting lineup for at least two of the Cincinnati games.

The Braves' slugger has 713 lifetime home runs, one behind Ruth.

Aaron said he had no comment on Kuhn's ruling, but added:

"I've said all I can say about it. I may have something to say later, but he's the commissioner of baseball, I suppose, and I have to abide by the rules."

Bill Bartholomay, the Braves' chairman of the board, was unavailable for comment, as was Atlanta Manager Eddie Mathews.

"I have had a number of discussions with Bill Bartholomay about his February announcement regarding Henry Aaron," Kuhn said. "Although he has advanced some substantial arguments in support of his announcement, he has not been able to persuade me that the procedure he wishes to follow is good for baseball."

"As a result, I have advised him that I am disapproving the announcement and that, barring disability, I will expect the Braves to use Aaron in the opening series in Cincinnati in accordance with the pattern of his use in 1973, when he started approximately two of every three Braves games."

Aaron started two of the first three games last season against Houston and appeared in 120 games, some of them as a pinch hitter. He batted .301 with 40 homers and 96 runs batted in.

At the Braves' training camp in West Palm Beach, Fla., Don Davidson, assistant to Bartholomay, said the club's reaction was "no comment."

"Bartholomay is traveling at the present time, but the 'no comment' holds for both me and Eddie Mathews," Davidson said.

However, Eddie Robinson, vice president of the Braves, said he was surprised by Kuhn's statement.

"Bill Bartholomay and I have talked since the ruling today," he said, "and I think there will be a comment forthcoming, but not at this time. We may have a statement, but not now. It's a ticklish thing, and I think we should be prepared before we make a statement."

National League West preview

Jim Wynn fills gap for Los Angeles

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Walter Alston says his young baseball team shouldn't be ashamed of its second-place finish in the National League West last season and will be better this year.

The Los Angeles Dodgers, managed by Alston for 21 years, have a strong nucleus returning and have added ace relief pitcher Mike Marshall.

Gone is veteran centerfielder Willie Davis, who was the team captain but had disagreements with Alston. He went to Montreal in exchange for Marshall.

To fill the key position in centerfield, the Dodgers traded left-handed pitcher Claude Osteen to Houston for Jim Wynn, the "toy cannon" who always has hit well in Dodger Stadium. Alston has promised more communication with his players, something most necessary in a year when there are so many youngsters on the squad.

There will be platooning, but some of the young players earlier asked to be traded because they didn't think there would be room for them.

Among them were catcher

Steve Yeager and infielder Lee Lacy.

Last year, Yeager and Joe Ferguson came up from Albuquerque and Ferguson won the catching job. His first hit was a home run and so was his second. He set Dodger records for catchers with 25 homers and 88 runs batted in.

Ferguson may play first base this season and undoubtedly there will be other experiments. Yet the Dodgers have another youngster, Bill Buckner, ready to go at first.

Buckner had 158 hits in 1973, ranking third on the Dodgers behind Davis' 171 and shortstop Bill Russell's 163.

Russell and Davey Lopes formed a sharp double play combination, and Lacy lost the starting job he had won in 1972. Ron Cey has the third base job unless he loses it to veteran

Michigan turns back Indiana in playoff

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Michigan's Wolverines, given little or no chance for the Big Ten championship, will represent the conference in the NCAA playoffs. And Indiana's Hoosiers, pre-season favorites, have been relegated to the "runner-up" tournament.

Michigan and Indiana tied for the Big Ten title, and in a special playoff at Illinois' Assembly Hall Monday night, the Wolverines battled to a 75-67 triumph.

Michigan, with a 21-4 record, advances to the NCAA Midwest Regional at Tuscaloosa, Ala., to face Notre Dame, while Indiana goes to St. Louis to play in the newly-formed Collegiate Commissioners Association Tournament.

C.J. Kupec with 22 points, Campy Russell with 17 and Wayne Britt with 16 lifted Michigan — which never trailed — to victory.

Indiana "super sub" John Laskowski went on a 20-point scoring spree — including eight of 10 points in one stretch — to pull the Hoosiers within one point twice in the closing minutes. But he couldn't quite turn the game around.

"No one thought we could win anything at the start of the season," said Michigan Coach Johnny Orr. "We played 25 times and 23 times we were the underdog. But this team has done some great things. None of these guys is anonymous any more."

"When we lost our leader (Russell) on fouls, we went to a delayed game and hit the free throws. Everyone came through. Indiana is a great team and Bobby Knight is a great coach. Beating them is really something," Orr said.

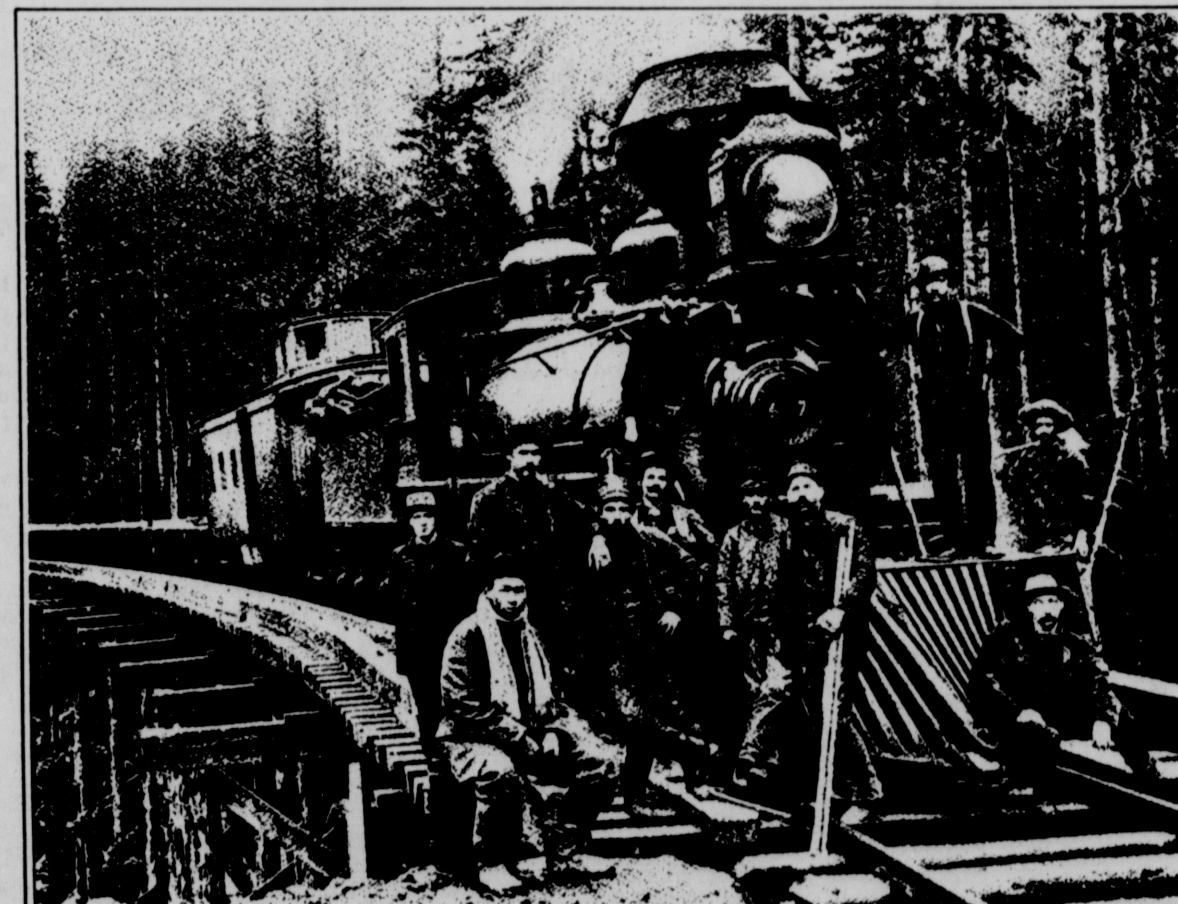

He shook his head when asked about Notre Dame, the nation's No. 3 team, and said, "We have to be very lucky and play our best game of the year to have a chance against Notre Dame."

Unwelcome hands

Indiana's John Laskowski (31) and Steve Green (34) team up to knock this shot away from Michigan's Campy Russell (white jersey) during the first half of Monday night's Big 10 playoff game in Champaign, Ill. Michigan stunned Indiana 75-67 and earned the league's NCAA playoff berth. (UPI)

Bucks close in on Midwest title

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

The Milwaukee Bucks, the Golden State Warriors and the New York Nets all have holds on first place — but with different grips.

It appears that the Bucks' hold is a strangle hold after Milwaukee crushed the Phoenix Suns Monday night 105-92 and grabbed a 4½-game lead over the Chicago Bulls in the Midwest Division of the National Basketball Association. The Bucks have seven games remaining and the Bulls have eight left.

If the Bucks should falter, they're still guaranteed a playoff spot.

Not so with the Golden State

Warriors, whose 120-108 victory over the Detroit Pistons raised their lead in the NBA's Pacific Division to one game over the Los Angeles Lakers.

Besides the division winners, two other teams in the Western Conference make it to the playoffs. The other two clubs qualify based on superior record, and at this stage of the season, Chicago and Detroit, both in the Midwest Division, have the inside track.

Therefore, whichever team maintains the upper hand between Los Angeles and Golden State, makes the playoff and the other probably faces elimination.

Over in the American Basketball Association, the New York Nets have a pinky hold of .002 over the Kentucky Colonels in the East Division after outlasting the Indiana Pacers 124-117 in double overtime Monday night.

But since only two teams in the entire 10-team ABA do not qualify for the playoffs, neither club has much to worry about.

Rounding out Monday's pro basketball action, the Virginia Squires scored a 102-91 ABA victory over the San Antonio Spurs.

Small college play opens Wednesday in Evansville

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Marvin "The Human Eraser" Webster and his Morgan State teammates will have a key challenge to their favored status Wednesday, when they tussle with Bloomsburg State in the opening game of the NCAA small college basketball tournament.

Webster, the leading vote-getter on this year's Associated Press All-America team, is the mainstay of No. 2 ranked Morgan State, with an average of nearly 22 points a game.

The 6-foot-11 junior was also the NCAA Division II rebound leader with almost 23 a game in the regular season.

Morgan State, 23-5, is the only team to have beaten NIT-bound Maryland-Eastern Shore this season.

The Baltimore, Md., school is the only ranked team in this tournament.

In the second quarterfinal game of the tourney, Louisiana State-New Orleans meets California-Riverside.

USC seeking redemption

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Southern Cal's Coach Bob Boyd says his Trojans will be out to redeem themselves in this week's Collegiate Commissioners Association Basketball Tournament.

"Nobody likes to end a season by being caved in," Boyd said Monday. "We have 22 wins and we're going to try to make it 25."

Boyd's Trojans, who have lost four times, were ranked seventh and riding an eight-game winning streak until demolished 82-52 by UCLA for the Pacific 8 Conference title Saturday night.

The crushing defeat plunged them to 15th in this week's ratings and relegated them to the eighth-team CCA, which is primarily for major conference runnersup.

A title in the test starting Thursday night, however, would salvage what Boyd called a "super season" and represent the school's most victories in a season.

Boyd, whose 1971 Trojans were 24-2, will send USC out to make amends beginning at the expense of Southern Methodist, 15-11, in the CCA's first round. Top-seeded in the meet's upper bracket, the Trojans if triumphant would meet the winner of Thursday night's other first-round game, Arizona State (18-8) or Toledo (18-8), in Sunday's semifinals.

The tournament, being staged a first time, also took on luster Monday night with the addition of 10th-ranked Indiana, which lost to 12th-ranked Michigan in the Big Ten Conference playoff.

Indiana, 20-5, will battle Tennessee, 17-8, of the Southeast Conference in a Friday night first-round opener while Kansas State, 19-7, of the Big Eight and Bradley, 19-7, close the opening card.

Royals make it three in row

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals, with three victories in three starts, are off to their fastest start in exhibition games since joining the American League in 1969.

With Al Fitzmorris, Wayne Simpson and Lindy McDaniel limiting the Big Red Machine of Cincinnati to five hits Monday, the Royals emerged winners, 3-1.

McDaniel, the ace reliever acquired in the off-season from the New York Yankees, hurled three shutout innings — a three-strikeout, one-hit performance. Manager Jack McKeon said he was impressed, that McDaniel "has good stuff."

In its first three games, Kansas City pitching has surrendered only five runs and 16 hits.

Vada Pinson, like McDaniel picked up in the off-season, rubbed out a 1-1 tie in the third inning with a home run over the right-field fence.

The Royals went to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., today to face the Yankees.

Robinson, Short, Davenport round out first team

Webster, Walker top Little All-America Team

NEW YORK (AP) — A shot-blocking marvel called a "near-pro franchise" and a player termed the best college division guard in the United States headline the Associated Press' 1974 Little All-America basketball team.

Marvin Webster, Morgan State's "Human Eraser" who once blocked 15 shots in one game, and West Georgia's Clarence Walker, called the nation's "premier small college guard" by pro scouts, were among those named to the team Monday.

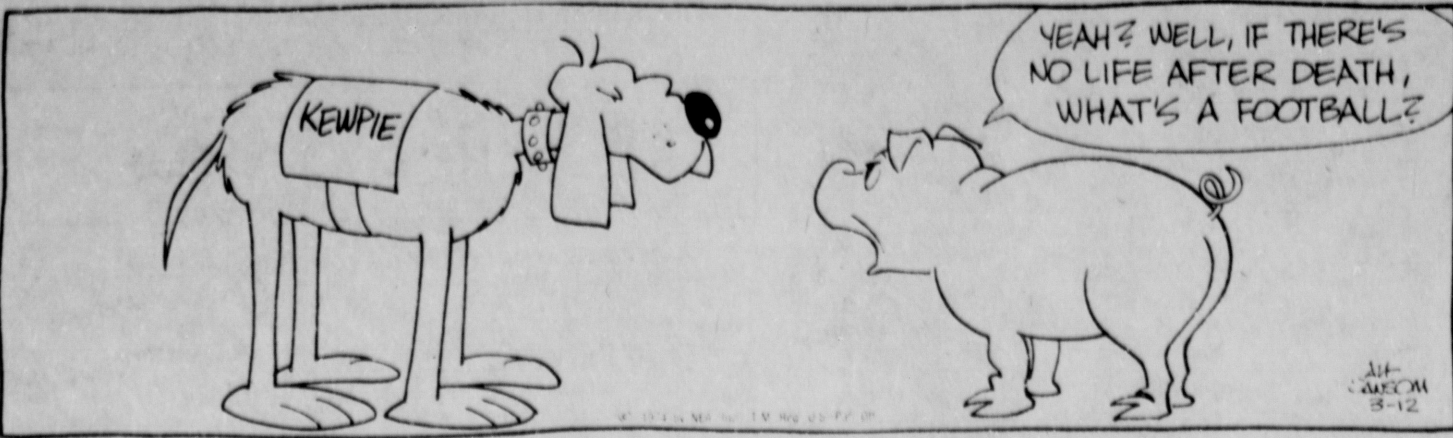

Along with the bruising, 6-foot-11 Webster and the slick, 6-foot Walker, The AP's gold-plated team included Tennessee State's Leonard Robinson, Eugene Short of Jackson State and Jerry Davenport of Cameron State.

Webster is perhaps the most spectacular in the gilt-edged group because of his fancy rebounding and shot-blocking talents.

He was the perennial weekly leader in the NCAA's Division II rebounding category and fin-

South wasted no time playing the three of spades from dummy. He spent a lot of time considering his play after East let his partner's eight hold. Finally, South played his own four of spades.

West continued with the deuce of spades and East put up his ace this time. East led a third spade to set up his last two spades, but it did him little good. South led diamonds and when West did take his ace, he had no way to get East in.

South had to lose a trick at the finish but was very happy to wind up making four notrump.

"Pretty good guess on the spades, wasn't it?" he chor- ties.

"It certainly was, but it was totally unnecessary," replied his partner. "If you had only stopped to think before playing from dummy at trick one you would have reached over and played the queen. After that play there would be no way to hurt you."

North was right. The second-hand-high play would be a sure winner here. East could take his ace, duck or sing a spring song, but he wouldn't set the contract.

America's singing cowboy recalls his good fortune

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Only 45 years ago the young cowboy from Oklahoma — broad-brimmed hat, boots and all — stepped stiffly from the railroad coach he'd ridden across the country, checked his guitar and his suitcase and began pounding New York's sidewalks looking for a job.

He wanted to sing. It wasn't that he thought the cowboy hat and boots would help. It was just the way he dressed back home.

In fact, Gene Autry looked much like the cowboys he sang about, including the one who got spruced up to visit the city, shedding his bandana and wearing a tie.

Today, Gene Autry is 66. He dresses like the conservative businessman he is. He owns a string of radio and television stations, a hotel in Palm Springs and the California Angels baseball team. He hopes to win an American League pennant in a year or two. He once owned the stately Mark Hopkins Hotel in San Francisco and a number of other hotels. In short, Gene Autry is a multimillionaire. He doesn't sing for his supper anymore, and even if he did, his fans wouldn't recognize the voice.

It is deeper now than the white-hatted cowboy tenor whose movies were built around his songs. He's come a long way from Tioga, Tex., where he was born, and the Oklahoma ranch where he helped his father raise mules and horses and cows as a youth, and the railroad ticket offices in the Southwest where he learned Morse, wrote train orders and sang to his guitar to pass the long night hours.

Still on success trail

Gene Autry today is a conservative businessman of 66, a multimillionaire. He owns a string of radio and television stations, a hotel in Palm Springs and the Los Angeles Angels baseball team. As the singing cowboy of films and records he made money — but, with an eye to when he couldn't perform any more, he went into business as well. He made his last movie in 1962. Now he's looking forward to winning an American League pennant in a year or two with his baseball team.

and he was only working part time on the railroad.

"Everybody was workin' part time. Looks as if this thing keeps going the way it is, they're going to be workin' part time again."

In his first recordings he scored a big hit with "That Silver-Haired Daddy of Mine," still one of his favorites. Then the hit parade continued with songs like "Mexicali Rose."

They wrote Autry into a Ken Maynard movie, Maynard being one of the kings of the roarin', tootin' shootin' set. The movie was "Old Santa Fe." Autry did two songs and had a part in the barn dance sequence.

"The picture did so well that in a lot of places on the theater marquees they billed me above Ken Maynard, and I was just a supporting player," says Autry.

They quickly put Autry into a Western serial, 12 cliff-hanging chapters, and he was on his way.

"The last movie I made was in 1962 or somewhere around there," Autry says. "I couldn't tell you the name of it, tell the truth. I made so many. Let's see. I made 56 for Republic, one for 20th Century and the serial, and I did 40 for Columbia in which I was a partner. And then I did 100 half-hour shows for television."

"That's a lot of ridin'. A lot of ridin' and shootin'. I was asked by some guy sittin' there how many fights have you held. And I said just figure the pictures, and there was one or two in every picture."

"I fought more rounds than Dempsey."

After 3 1/2 years in the Air Force in World War II he bought his first radio station, KOOL, in Phoenix. His partner was Tom Chaucery who remains his partner today. Then he bought another station in Tucson. Today most of his stations, from Los Angeles to Seattle, are grouped under Golden West Broadcasters.

But it seemed he had all his eggs in one basket, a government-controlled basket. He decided to diversify. "That's how I happened to get into the hotel business."

But the hotel business was tough, too, so he sold the Mark Hopkins in San Francisco, and the Continental Hotel in Los Angeles.

He'd been an ardent baseball fan since his youth. He knew Dizzy Dean and his brother Paul, and in his Chicago days he met a lot of ballplayers. His stations broadcast the Giants and Dodger games on the West Coast. But when the Dodgers decided to go to another station in Los Angeles, Autry looked for his own baseball franchise. Which is how he came to own the Angels, an expansion club.

It's been a hard building job, but now, "I think we're coming along in pretty good shape. If we can get a couple of young kids to come through for us and a couple of breaks, why we might not be more than a year or two away."

It all keeps him pretty busy. He goes to almost every home game, and tries to make one road trip a year. But he never forgets where it all began, in simpler days, in a more simple America.

"I don't think the country or the world as a whole has been in such damn turmoil as it is right now. It's a different generation than I was brought up in. They're slouchy. They don't care how they dress or anything like that. When I was a young guy growing up, I always wanted a nice haircut and my shoes shined and a good-looking outfit. And now it just seems the opposite."

"You didn't read or hear about the dope you have today. Of course back then there was prohibition, so you might see young men, but not kids, drinking out of fruit jars or something like that. But you didn't hear of dope peddling."

"Sure there's a lot of good kids around, too, many fine ones. I think unfortunately you read about the bad ones and you don't read about the good ones."

Gene likes to take a visitor through the old scrapbooks of his days as a singing cowboy. His records have sold almost 40 million copies. His biggest hit was "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer," which accounted for 10 million of those. But his favorites were "South of the Border," written by two Englishmen, and "Silver-Haired Daddy of Mine," and his theme song, "Back In the Saddle," naturally.

He has purchased all of his old films and they are running now on his Los Angeles television station. "I forget to tune them in half the time. I have to watch them to find out what they are all about. If you make that many pictures over 25 years, it's pretty hard to remember."

Executed soldier's wife living under assumed name

DETROIT (AP) — The widow of the only American soldier shot for desertion since the Civil War is living here under an assumed name and trying to forget, a Detroit newspaper reports.

Antionette Slovik, wife of Pvt. Eddie Slovik, who was executed during World War II, had been presumed dead for nearly a decade by all who knew her, except a few close relatives. She and Slovik had no children.

But obscurity may become more difficult for Mrs. Slovik, now 60.

NBC Television is scheduled to air a movie-length documentary Wednesday on the life of Eddie Slovik, whose execution was kept secret from even the Detroit GI's wife for nine years.

Based on a book by William Bradford Huie, the movie traces Slovik's path to an anonymous grave in France reserved for GIs convicted of violent crimes.

"If it hadn't been for the incident (Slovik's execution), my life would have been different," Mrs. Slovik told the Detroit News in a copyrighted story. "But since then, it's been nothing but hell."

"They took a sick man," she said of Eddie, who had been granted a deferment because of a prison record but was then reclassified and drafted.

"He had bad legs and really wasn't fit for combat," she said.

An Army buddy, John Tanky of Dearborn Heights, recalled that in the fall of 1944 he and Slovik were lost in France after a German machine gun nest wiped out nine of 12 men in their squad.

After 45 days with a Canadian unit, they finally caught up with their unit in Elsenborn, Belgium.

Tanky recalled: "I reported to a captain first and was in there about 45 minutes. He told me, 'You're a rifleman now, but you're going to be a machine gunner.'"

"Then Eddie went in. He was in there a long time and soon I could hear shouting coming through the door."

"Eddie came out real fast, brushing by me and he didn't have his rifle. The captain told me, 'You'd better stop your buddy. He's going to get into a lot of trouble.'"

"I asked Eddie, what are you doing? But he jerked his arm away from me and said, 'John, leave me alone. I know what I'm doing.' That was the last time I saw him, walking down a hill."

That was Oct. 8, 1944. The next day Slovik gave himself up and signed a paper saying he refused to carry a rifle.

Slovik was sentenced to death by an Army court-martial, and two days before Christmas of that year, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower signed the execution order. The order was carried out on Jan. 31, 1945.

Both Mrs. Slovik and Tanky told the News they did not hear of the execution until Huie contacted her while researching the Slovik case.

"Huie and I had to go to Washington to get Eddie's file released," said Mrs. Slovik, who lives on a $160-a-month Social Security pension. "They treated us like dirt."

"I tried to see Eisenhower, who was then president, but he refused to answer my letter and see me."

"Eddie wasn't a coward. He just hated violence. They never should have put him in a combat role."

Smoking in bed said cause of fire

KANSAS CITY (AP) — A Kansas City man was killed Tuesday in a fire that caused extensive damage to his home, fire department officials said.

The victim was identified as Robert L. Narron, 38.

Investigators said the fire apparently was caused by smoking in bed. His wife and a child, sleeping in other rooms, escaped without injury, investigators said.
